Progress of the Anti-Slavery Cause in Spain.

From the Tribune. The latest number of the London Anti-Slavery Reporter contains the most cheering news about the progress of abolitionism in Spain.

The Spanish Anti-Slavery Society continues its labors with unremitting zeal and with remarkable success. Before the public organization of this Society, a year or two ago, only one journal in all Spain had advocated in its columns the cause of emancipation. In November, 1865, The Anti-Slavery Reporter published a list of thirty-two Spanish papers which declared the abolition of slavery desirable on various grounds, though differing as to the mode of accomplishing it.

- 1. Radical Abolitionists (pledged to advocate the complete and immediate emancipation).....41
2. Favorable to Emancipation, though not committed to Radical Abolitionism.....37
3. Pro-Slavery.....14

In the city of Madrid the strength of the parties in the press is as follows:—
1. Radical Abolitionists.....14
2. Favorable to Emancipation.....16
3. Pro-Slavery.....2

The Senate and Retrenchment.

From the Herald. The Senate of the United States has at one time a body distinguished as well for its dignity and talent as for its probity and high-toned sense of personal honor. But it has within a few years taken a long leap in a contrary direction, and instead of acting as a check to the wild extravagance of the lower house, now only serves as a wheel horse to the jolting cart of that profligate body.

Not a word was said about the numerous jobs Congress had put through during the session, involving an unnecessary expenditure directly from the Treasury and indirectly from the people of two hundred and fifty millions. But, while thus piling on the public expense, they, with a coolness particularly reprehensible, by thermometer at ninety-six, appoint a committee to see where retrenchment can be effected in other departments of the Government.

Austria.

From the Daily News. When the treaties of Vienna, in 1815, established order out of the chaos which had existed in Europe for more than twenty years, the House of Hapsburg received an addition to its hereditary possessions, and was also deprived of territory that it had previously held. The Belgian provinces, which had been wrested from it by the army of the French republic, were added to the dominions of the House of Orange; the Austrian Empire was increased by the addition of Milan and Venice, under the title of a Lombardo-Venetian kingdom; the Italian provinces, also known as the Kingdom of Venetia, the Tyrol, Vorarlberg, Salzburg, the Inn, and Hausruckviertel, and that part of Galicia ceded by Austria at a previous period. The war of 1859 deprived the Kaiser of Lombardy, and in present conflict with Venice, the Emperor has lost his rule; and when arms and diplomacy have run their course, it is impossible to say what other changes may be wrought in the map of his empire.

The State of the War in Europe.

From the Times. According to the Bernian's news, the Prussians and Italians have all their own way—the Prussians by hard fighting, the Italians by slow marching. The battle of Aschaffenburg must have been a considerable affair, and its loss is unquestionably a serious disaster to the Federals. We have up to this paid comparatively but little attention to the war movements in Middle Germany, which, judged by the weight of events in Bohemia, appeared like Libphutan concerns. But this battle has at last shaped the results in a manner that tells upon the future of Austria no less than of Germany.

view their army into two columns on marching southward, following out here the same strategy as on their march into Bohemia, and just as they united their two advancing columns on the eve of the decisive day at Sudowa, they very likely united for battle before the day of Aschaffenburg. One column advanced through Electoral Hesse by way of Hünfeld and Fulda, the other through Meiningen, over Muennerstadt and Kassel, having the Rhoden Mountains for their base. The same strategical fault committed by the Austrian Benedek can be charged to the Prince Alexander of Hesse and the Prince Charles of Bavaria, the Federal commander, who waited till the enemy became too strong for them. The Prussians, after the junction of their two columns, had three corps d'armee, probably a hundred thousand men, if not over that.

From the Augsburg Gazette, brought by the Courier, we have already learned that the evacuation of Frankfurt had been determined upon, and that the Federal troops would abandon their capital and concentrate around Schweinfurt, some fifty miles directly east in Unter-Franconia, and lower Franconia, near Altmühl, a battle was expected. Perhaps the Federals were just on their way to Schweinfurt, when they were attacked and beaten at Aschaffenburg. Of course, the Prussians will now occupy Frankfurt, and we may soon hear of them at Würzburg, in Bavaria; Darmstadt, in Hesse; and Würzburg, in Ducal Hesse, and we would not wonder if the Bavarian Palatinate of the Rhine should shortly be invaded and occupied by them. All this may be the result of this single defeat, just as the present apparent success of Austria was the result of that unlucky day at Sudowa.

The Prussians have advanced far into Moravia, and occupied Brunn, a highly fortified city on the confuence of the Zvitawa and the Schwarzwasser, and lower Franconia, near Altmühl, an ominous name for Austria. If the Austrian commander is still at Olmutz with his army, we may soon look for another battle. There are two valleys that cut through the centre of Moravia, the southern line from north to south, and about thirty miles apart—the valley of the Schwarzwasser, in which is situated Brunn, and more easterly the valley of the March, with the town and fortress of Olmutz as the commanding point. Both these valleys unite on the Hungarian frontier, where the Thaya river joins the March, and here also the two railroads from Brunn and Olmutz to Vienna connect. Since the introduction of railroads as important factors in strategical calculations, this point has become of the utmost importance. Over it alone can Benedek communicate with his basis of supply and reinforcements, and over it alone can the enemy approach the Austrian capital. Hence, we expect to hear of a sharp, bloody combat for the possession of this point. Other than Olmutz and Brunn, the only railroads in throwing the bulk of his troops south of the Moravian line for the immediate defense of Vienna, then the level plains of the Marchfeld, where the Austrian armies have been so often defeated, and so often defeated, from the time of King Ottocar to the disastrous day of Wagram, will again be the field where the decisive battle is to be fought.

The Fall of Frankfurt.

From the World. The battle of Aschaffenburg, of which we have as yet the merest telegraphic intelligence, may be said to have been fought at the very gates of the Federal city of Frankfurt. Whether the Prussian troops engaged in it were under the command of Manteuffel or of Falkenstein we do not yet know; but when we remember that he received by the last steamer the news of a battle fought at Kissingen, in Bavaria, between the army of Falkenstein and a portion of the Federal forces, and that from Kissingen a fine road leads southward a little more than forty miles to Aschaffenburg, the inference would seem not to be unreasonable, that the Prussians, having taken themselves to have had the better of Falkenstein at Kissingen, were in fact beaten by him at that pleasant watering-place and that the subsequent victory of the Prussians at Aschaffenburg has not only compelled the evacuation of Frankfurt, but secured the junction of the two divisions of the western army of Prussia, just as the victory of Gitschin secured the junction of her two grand armies, and led to her triumph at the crowning triumph at Sudowa, or Königgratz, as the victors see fit to baptize it. One of the probable immediate results of this western battle will be to detach from the Austrian alliance the already hesitating Grand Duke of Baden, who is now held by the full force of the vengeance of Prussia. Another will be to put the unlucky Duke of Nassau absolutely into the power of the puissant monarchy with which he has been unwise enough to quarrel most ostentatiously, and which he has now, once the western link both of Bavaria and Wurtemberg, and so to paralyze the efforts of these powers to carry help to the sorely straitened Kaiser.

Aschaffenburg lies on the river Main, and on the line of the Hannau Railway, just about twenty-five miles southeast of Frankfurt, and some forty miles east of the Federal fortress of Mayence, and some thirty miles west of the capital of the Electors of Mayence, from whom it was taken in 1814 to be given to Napoleon's newly created King of Bavaria by the allies, who, having overthrown, the creator spared not a low his conquests. Its four-square old castle has seen many a sharp fight and many a wondrous shuffle of the cards of fate; but it has never got itself before into history in any connection so important as now.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

(For Additional City Intelligence see Fifth Page.)

ARSON.—It is but a few days since that we had to record a case of arson. It is very seldom that cases of this kind come up before our courts. A present another case, occurring some time ago. Yesterday, at 2 o'clock, Samuel Stearn, Elizabeth Stearn and Emma Keyser, all hearing before Recorder Eben on a charge of arson. Fire Marshal Blackburn testified that the defendants, Mr. and Mrs. Stearn, occupied a two-story dwelling, No. 158 Brown street, where they kept a small grocery store, and were engaged in buying and selling rags, etc. On the 25th of May, in the evening, fire was discovered in the upper story, and in a few minutes the fire had broken out, and the fire was extinguished. At the time the fire originated there was no person present in the house, except Mrs. Stearn and Emma Keyser, a domestic.

For the CONVENTION.—Conservatives do not rip and tear because things are not always exactly right, neither do the conservatives protesting against the Convention do so because they are not satisfied with the Convention. They are not satisfied with the Convention because they are not satisfied with the Convention. They are not satisfied with the Convention because they are not satisfied with the Convention.

CLEVERMEN owe it as a duty to their flocks, as well as to themselves, to maintain, as far as may be, a sound state of body. The days are gone when health was considered to be inconsistent with noise. The nature of their duties imposes upon Clergymen a mode of life not the most compatible to perfect physical health. They live a life too purely sedentary; they use the brain too much, and the muscles too little. Hence, by sympathy the secretive functions are enfeebled, and act imperfectly. To remedy this, medicines are required. So thoroughly is the proprietor of MARSDEN'S VEGETABLE SANATIVE PILLS aware of the precious value to the whole community of the services of this branch of the learned professions, that he will gladly furnish, free of cost, this medicine to Clergymen of every denomination, not only for their own personal use, but to be given to those who are unable to purchase, whom they may encounter in their constant rounds of mercy. Depot, No. 457 Broadway, New York. For sale by Johnston, Hollister & Co., Wholesale Agents, No. 23 N. Sixth street, Philadelphia, and by all druggists.
