Misrepresentation of the Opinions of Public Men.

Nothing can be more reprehensible than that misrepresentation of the opinions of public men which is sometimes indulged in by the press.

An example of this kind has just occurred in regard to a recent speech delivered by Senator Wade in Kansas.

There was nothing in the speech of a "startling" or uncommon character. A thousand men might have made it.

It was no mysterious or Delphic utterance, calling for profounder sagacity than usual to understand it.

It was a simple, straightforward utterance, carrying its meaning on its face.

Nevertheless, no sooner was it made than certain journals pounced upon it, and pretended to find in it agrarianism, Proudhonism, the advocacy of a general division of property, and we know not what other monstrosities.

The New York Times was foremost in this excellent work. Its columns teemed for days with elaborate articles, duly setting forth what a terrible pass the country was coming to when the acting Vice-President could openly advocate such dangerous doctrines.

All the changes were rung upon "agrarianism" which that mysterious and awe-inspiring term could give occasion for.

The public were warned, with many a solemn shake of the head, of the dangerous tendencies of radicalism, and of the blood-thirsty proclivities of its disciples.

In short, the thing was "worked up" with all the gusto of the most reckless partisanship.

Now we will impeach the intelligence of the Times by supposing that for a moment it really misunderstood Senator Wade's remarks.

It did not; but it thought the speech gave occasion for making a little capital against the radicals, and it could not forego the temptation to improve the opportunity to the utmost.

No considerations of justice towards an eminent and worthy statesman—no thought of justice towards the public, which has a right to demand truth and candor in journalism, restrained its utterance.

It saw a chance to make a point against the radicals, and that was all it cared for. The Times never supposed that Mr. Wade meant "agrarianism," or that he was in favor of a division of property.

It knew better. It was a case of pure, premeditated, gratuitous misrepresentation, and entirely unworthy of the character which that journal professes to maintain.

It was to this vice of the misrepresentation of the opinions and sentiments of leading public men at the North, that the ignorance, prejudice, and false public sentiment of the South, previous to the Rebellion, was in a great measure due.

The Southern people had been misled—utterly, totally—as to the real sentiments of the leaders of the Republican party.

We can very well remember how, for some time after the delivery of Mr. Seward's great speech in which he first used that notable, and now historic expression, the "irrepressible conflict," the New York Herald denounced that speech as a "brutal and bloody manifesto" against the rights and interests of the South.

It was for years the persistent custom of the Northern Democratic press to represent the Republican leaders as Abolitionists of the Garrison and Phillips school.

This kind of teaching finally brought forth its fruit in a bloody civil war. It is now being repeated by journals which call themselves Conservative.

a man who consents to run as the representative of such obnoxious principles. It would be self-stultification to do it.

The Death of the Archduke of Austria. ALL reasonable grounds for doubt as to the fate of the Archduke Maximilian seem to be dispelled by the intelligence received yesterday.

It must now be accepted as an historical fact that the Prince was executed on the 19th ultimo, immediately previous to the successful assault on the City of Mexico.

There could be no fate so well calculated to bring the unfortunate empire of Mexico to a dramatic conclusion, and to preserve the unity of that national drama.

An invader in 1863, an emperor in 1864, the head of a faction in 1865, and a martyr in 1867. Such were the shifting fortunes of the best of all the House of Hapsburg who has lived within a century.

Viewing the climax in the light of equity, we cannot deny that the Republicans were almost justified in taking the step they did.

If their remedy was a desperate one, their wrongs were also desperate. Because of their weakness they had been invaded by a coalition of strangers, and a usurper put over their heads.

They were not responsible for the fate meted out to the self-constituted Emperor. He took his life into his hands when he landed on their shores, and his only good pretext for his action was that he possessed the might.

When that failed him, he could expect but little mercy from the hands of those whom he had sought to make his subjects.

Besides, the policy of the Prince towards the captured Liberals was not such as to secure for him a merciful judgment.

He endeavored to quell the opposition by declaring all who opposed him outlaws, and treating them like felons.

He raised the black flag with his own hands; and while we admire the gallantry of his adherence to his sinking cause, and pity his untimely fate, we cannot deny that he made his own bed, and it is his own fault that he to-day lies laid within it.

He might have fled the country with the French; but with a daring which excites our admiration, he preferred to risk his life with his new people rather than become the piteous of all the courts of Europe.

Had he lived to reënter the palace of his brother the Emperor of Austria, he would have done so as a beggar.

Upon accepting the offer of Napoleon, he surrendered his estates, amounting to millions a-year, to his brother, as his wealth as Archduke was greater than that of the Emperor himself; but reserved, in case of his return to Europe within ten years, the right of succession to the empire.

Had he reached Vienna, he would have been heir apparent to the Austrian throne, yet without a cent of revenue; so that it may be questioned whether it was not better for him to die bravely in his new country, rather than live in poverty and distress at his brother's court.

We have so far viewed the execution in the light of right, but if we look at it as to its expediency, we must arrive at a very different conclusion.

It cannot be denied that Juarez has made a fearful, if not a fatal, blunder in carrying out the utmost severity of the law against his captive.

Had he been sufficiently magnanimous to spare the life of the Prince, he would have gained the gratitude of many of the European powers, whose family ties are interwoven with those of his victim.

He could have secured from Francis Joseph a fabulous ransom, which would have gone far towards paying off the indebtedness of the republic and making the spoiler pay for its damage.

As it now is, all claims on Austria or France are forever lost. Vengeance takes the place of anxiety, and no compensation can be secured.

Besides, the United States had asked the life of the Prince, and the action of Juarez has alienated the friendly feelings which have heretofore existed in Washington.

Mecca, and she may still exist in undiminished vigor when some traveller from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand on the broken arch of London bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's.

Alexander H. Stephens on the Causes of the War.

No kind of literature has been so abundant for the past two years as that relating to the war. It already numbers several hundred volumes, and is destined doubtless to a large increase.

The most of this, as is natural, is really but the material out of which the future historian will get his facts for the real history of these times.

Mr. Greeley's history is about the only one, as yet written, that pretends to deal with the philosophy of the great struggle, and, of course, his view is from the Northern standpoint.

We must necessarily in time have a similar effort from the Southern side of the house. Indeed, we learn that such a work is now in progress of preparation, and approaching completion, by Alexander H. Stephens, Vice-President of the late so-called Southern Confederacy.

The high reputation of Mr. Stephens as a man of candor, and his philosophic cast of mind, must render such a work from his pen one of great interest and value.

Without doubt, he will put the South in the most favorable light which the facts in the case will warrant; but with Mr. Stephens' already recorded views of the struggle, as given in his celebrated "corner-stone" speech, we shall look for a very different work from that which would be written by the Davis school of Southern men.

Mr. MINISTER ADAMS.—At the banquet given at St. James' Hall to William Lloyd Garrison, a letter was read from Mr. Charles Francis Adams, the tone of which, we are told, was "rather qualified and reserved."

The course of Mr. Adams is not such as we would expect from the son of John Quincy Adams. His sympathy seems hardly to be in union with that of the great North, and as his son is an advocate of President Johnson's policy, it is not unlikely that the love of office has transformed our Minister in England into one of those time-servers among whom Mr. Motley refused to be ranked.

Considering the record of his father and grandfather, we had expected better things.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

THEIR FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS AS AN INVESTMENT.

The rapid progress of the Union Pacific Railroad, now building west from Omaha, Nebraska, and forming, with its western connections, an unbroken line across the continent, attracts attention to the value of the First Mortgage Bonds which the Company now offer to the public.

First. The early completion of the whole great line to the Pacific is as certain as any future business event can be. The Government grant of over twenty million acres of land and fifty million dollars in its own bonds practically guarantees it.

Second. The Union Pacific Railroad bonds are issued upon what amounts to be one of the most profitable lines of railroad in the country. For many years it must be the only line connecting the Atlantic and Pacific and being, without compulsion, it can maintain remunerative rates.

Third. The amount is strictly limited by law to a sum equal to what is granted by the United States Government, and for which it takes a second lien as its security. This amount upon the first six miles west from Omaha is only $16,000 per mile.

Fourth. The net earnings of the sections already finished are several times greater than the gold interest upon the First Mortgage bonds upon such sections, and if not another mile of the road were built, the part already completed would not only pay interest and expenses, but be profitable to the Company.

Fifth. The Union Pacific Railroad bonds can be held only as the road progresses, and therefore can never be in the market unless they represent a bona fide property.

Sixth. Their amount is strictly limited by law to a sum equal to what is granted by the United States Government, and for which it takes a second lien as its security. This amount upon the first six miles west from Omaha is only $16,000 per mile.

Seventh. The fact that the United States Government considers a second lien upon the road a good investment, and that some of the surest railroad builders of the country have already paid in five million dollars upon the stock (which is to them a third lien), may well inspire confidence in a first lien.

Eighth. Although it is not claimed that there can be any better securities than Governments, there are parties who consider a first mortgage upon such a property as this the very best security in the world, and who sell their governments to reinvest in these bonds, thus securing a greater interest.

Ninth. As the Union Pacific Railroad bonds are offered for the present at 90 cents on the dollar and accrued interest, they are the cheapest security in the market, being 10 per cent. less than United States stocks.

Tenth. At the current rate of premiums on gold they pay OVER NINE PER CENT. INTEREST.

The daily subscriptions are already large, and they will continue to be received in New York by the CONTINENTAL NATIONAL BANK, No. 7 NASSAU STREET.

Subscribers will select their own Agents, in whom they have confidence, who alone will be responsible to them for the safe delivery of the Bonds.
