Final Passage of the Supplementary Reconstruction Bill.

This Supplementary Reconstruction bill passed both Houses of Congress on Saturday, and was immediately sent to the President. The bill is a brief one, consisting of only eleven sections.

The first section declares the true intent and meaning of the original Reconstruction acts to have been that the Governments then existing in the late Rebel States "were not legal State Governments," and if continued were to be in all respects "subject to the military commanders of the respective districts, and to the paramount authority of Congress."

Section 2 confers upon the Commander of every District, subject to the approval of the General of the Army of the United States, power to suspend or remove any officer, civil or military, pretending to hold under the authority of any so-called State Government within his District, and to fill his place by appointment.

Section 3 confers upon the General of the Army the same powers conferred, in section 2, upon the District Commanders.

Section 4 confirms the removals and appointments already made by the District Commanders, and makes it their positive duty to remove from office all disloyal persons and those who use their influence to obstruct or defeat the execution of the law.

Section 5 refers to the matter of registration, making it the duty of Registration Boards to ascertain, by such information as they may be able to obtain, whether applicants for registration are entitled to be registered; provides that the oath of the applicants shall not be received as conclusive, and that no person shall be registered unless such board shall decide that he is entitled thereto.

Section 6 defines with particularity the intent of the law with reference to the holding of office as a disqualification for registration.

Section 7 provides that, in the discretion of the commander of any district, the time for completing the original registration may be extended to the first day of October, 1867; also, that the Registration Boards shall devote five days, commencing fourteen days previous to any election held under the act, to a revision of the registry, when they shall strike from the list the name of any person who they may be satisfied was not entitled to be registered, and add the names of any who are entitled, and have not already been registered; but no person who would otherwise be disqualified shall be registered by virtue of any Executive pardon or amnesty.

Section 8 imposes the oath of office prescribed by law upon United States officers upon all persons holding office, under whatever authority, in the military districts.

Section 9 declares that no District Commander, or officer under him, shall be bound in his action by any opinion of any civil officer of the United States.

Section 10 authorizes the commanding general in any district to remove any member of a board of registration and appoint another in his stead.

Section 11 declares that this act and those to which it is supplementary shall be construed liberally, to the end that all the intents thereof may be fully and perfectly carried out.

Such is a brief summary of the measure that Congress has so promptly and unanimously passed. It will be seen that no additional burdens have been laid upon the people of the late Rebel States, no difficulties thrown in the way of reconstruction, no harsh measures imposed. Congress has merely removed out of the way the stumbling-blocks placed in the path of reconstruction by the President.

Both Houses would be prepared to adjourn and go home, were it not that they are obliged to wait until the President shall have interposed once more his ineffectual veto. The session was entirely unnecessary. The laws it stood upon plain enough, and was well understood by the President. Had he been willing to honestly execute it, Congress need not have assembled. This supplementary bill is really no more explicit than was the original one. A fair and honest interpretation of that would have reached the same ends attained by this one. And we have no doubt that Stanton's genius at pettifoggery would enable him to explain away or get around the plainest provisions of this bill just passed as easily as in the case of the original acts.

The action of Congress at this adjourned session has been eminently wise. It has given the lie completely to those who have so persistently asserted that its only object was to hinder the work of reconstruction and delay the admission of the late Rebel States. It has strengthened its position with the people, and gained anew the confidence of the country.

lips are sealed. The case of the bottom of the Hudson covers him. This was Seward's friend, Preston King. He it was who, in the dark interval between Mrs. Seward's sentence and execution, kept guard at the White House. He repelled the tempting caresses he denied all access to the Executive. And the day of doom came, and the bolt was drawn, and the man who had barred the gates of mercy threw himself off a Jersey City ferry boat, and, with loaded pockets and a conscience burdened, sank to the bottom of the river. But Holt and Stanton will live to tell what became of the recommendation to mercy."

We have seldom, among all the filth of partisan journalism, discovered a more dastardly effort to coin political capital out of the misfortunes of the dead. By what right does our neighbor assert that the recommendation to mercy never reached the President? Such an assertion is not warranted by any fact or deduction. The paper was signed by a dozen officers, and it is ridiculous to suppose that it, with all the other evidence and findings of the Court, did not go before Mr. Johnson. In the effort to shield Mr. Johnson and gain political credit, it looks around for a victim on whom to throw the weight of its wicked invention. It must select one who cannot answer. So Mr. Preston King, a gentleman noted for his extreme kindness of heart, his genial nature, and his merciful disposition, whose bosom was overflowing with the milk of human kindness, and against whom, during life, no word of detraction was breathed, is now brought forth as little better than a villain, and his untimely death traced to his having connived at the death of an innocent woman. He drowned himself through remorse. So the Age declares. And the only ground for its assertion is that the ex-Senator was intimate at the White House! Why was he, out of all the others, selected? Because he is dead and the others are living. For mean assaults on the departed, for utter falsity, and desperate attempts to coin political capital out of slander and utter fabrication, we give our Democratic contemporary the palm.

The True History of the Santa Anna Expedition. A MEMORANDUM from the Secretary of State, made public this morning, and which we publish on our inside pages, throws considerable additional light on the capture of Santa Anna. The story, so industriously circulated, of a forcible seizure, an insult to the flag of the United States, and the brutal conduct of his captors, is scattered to the winds by the official report of the affair. Viewed in the light of all the circumstances, we agree with the Secretary of State, that the United States Government is perfectly right in declaring that "In this view of the subject this Department not only does not disallow nor censure, but it approves the proceedings of the United States Consul and Commander Roe at Vera Cruz."

The circumstances of the arrival at Vera Cruz and the professions made by the Ex-dictator are peculiarly aggravating, and would justify the United States Government in availing some of its rights in order that the audacious pretender might be punished. It appears that Santa Anna stated to the Consul that he came authorized by the President to take charge of affairs in Mexico; that he had in his possession a letter from Mr. Johnson appointing him as the successor of Juarez, and promising him the aid of our Government; that a fleet of men-of-war had been ordered from New York by the Secretary of State to come to Mexico and support his interests; and that speedily, if the city of Vera Cruz held out, it would be relieved by the United States forces. This story was believed in Vera Cruz, and the negotiations, although conducted on the most favorable terms, were broken off, the war resumed, and the lives of thousands and the safety of the city once more endangered by the ambition and perfidy of this reckless adventurer. Under these circumstances Commander Roe visited the Virginia, on which Santa Anna and his staff were still residing, took the General on board the Tacony, put out to sea, and there delivered him again to the captain of the Virginia, on the pledge that he would land anywhere but on the soil of Mexico. This proceeding was perfectly justified both by international law and sound policy. It was required for the good of the city of Vera Cruz and for the preservation of the honor of the United States. The estimate held by Santa Anna of the Mexican people must have been a very low one indeed, when he circulated so silly as well as so false a story about the intentions of our Government. That we should support the ally of Maximilian after our persistent opposition, and that even in the hour of victory we should abandon the man by whom we have constantly stood throughout the darkest days of his peril, is the height of the ridiculous. To be sure, our neighbors are almost justified in believing that the State Department would do the most absurd thing possible, judging from its policy towards Mexico during the war; but there is a boundary to everything, and the declaration of Santa Anna passes that boundary. To follow the wanderings of that person: it seems that, instead of going to Cuba or returning to the United States, he stopped at Sisal, a Mexican port, in direct violation of his pledge, and that there he corresponded with the Imperial Governor of Yucatan; that he landed there of his own free will, although force was threatened should he refuse, and was taken somewhere into the interior. Upon this Mr. Naphegy desires the Government of the United States to relieve him by its intervention, and that the Government very properly declines to do. The whole conduct of Santa Anna throughout this expedition is such as to cancel whatever pity we may have otherwise felt for his probable fate. It is so infamous that, having taken his hand, he must win or lose, and expect no sympathy or aid from us.

The general tenor of the memorandum meets our approval, and we think it will take all our rosate optimism to equal that of Mr. Seward when he closes with the belief that "the Mexican nation seems at last to have triumphed over all its internal and foreign enemies, and to have reached a crisis when, if left alone, it may be expected to restore tranquility, and to reorganize itself upon permanent foundations of union, freedom, and republican government."

We think that it is much more likely that the melancholy tragedy of the "Gale of Kilkenny" will be enacted across the Rio Grande, if our neighbor be, as Mr. Seward neatly expresses, "left alone to reorganize itself on the permanent foundations of union, freedom, and republican government."

LET US HAVE THE NAME. — A Lancaster paper states that one of the Philadelphia evening papers is in the habit of stealing its editorials, and publishing them without credit. We hope that our country neighbor will give the name of the offending journal. So far as we are concerned, we never had the pleasure of seeing a copy of its issue, but suppose it must be an excellent sheet if the city papers are so eager to appropriate its articles. By all means let us have the name of the plagiarist.

FIRE IN CONCORD, N. H. The American House and Emmons Building Destroyed—Loss About $25,000. CONCORD, N. H., July 13.—A most destructive fire occurred in this city at an early hour this morning, and in a few minutes the American House, on Main street, immediately north of the American House, the alarm was promptly given, but the combustible nature of the property within the fire occurred rendered it impossible to stay the progress of the flames until serious losses had been incurred. The Emmons Building, which was well on fire before the flames communicated to the sheds of the American House, and from thence to the hotel proper, which was entirely swept away.

The Emmons block was three stories in height, and was some years ago occupied as a store by the father of the late John L. Emmons, a merchant of Boston. In the basement were two eating saloons. The first was occupied by Henry M. Sinclair and Calvin H. Leighton. They saved the first portion of their effects, and were insured for $1000. The other eating saloon on the first floor was kept by Timothy Moore, who was uninsured, but saved most of his stock and fixtures. On the second floor was an eating saloon and billiard room, kept by Benjamin Stevens and owned by Samuel P. Hoyt; contents all destroyed; loss about $500; insured for $400. The remainder of the building was occupied by Mrs. Susan Gass, widow of the builder of the American House. She owned one-half of the building, and was insured $1000 on real estate and $1000 on furniture in the Old Hartford. Her loss is estimated at $2500, though she saved the larger portion of her personal effects. On the third floor of the building was owned by S. C. Badger, a lawyer. His loss was about $2500; insured for $1000 in the Rogers Williams. A small wooden building on the north was destroyed, and the contents cleared of its contents. The lower part was Frank Dow's eating saloon. Fixtures and stock damaged by removal and water, but were insured. James Goddard and family lived overhead.

South of the Emmons Building and fronting on Main and Park streets was the work of the American House, which was completely destroyed. It was built of wood, three stories in height, and was owned by Benjamin W. Sanborn, who also owned the hotel. The loss of Mr. Sanborn's stock is estimated at $15,000. He had two insurances on the house; one for $5000 on the East and one for $10,000 on the Old Hartford. His furniture was insured $1000 in the Old Hartford. The hotel was kept by John Muzzey, Jr., of Hillsboro, who took a lease of the building from Mr. Sanborn. The hotel was a double dwelling house owned and occupied by Dr. A. H. Robinson and Wm. H. Rixford. It was several stories high, and was insured for $10,000. A double dwelling house owned and occupied by Dr. A. H. Robinson and Wm. H. Rixford.
