The Case of Mississippi. When the result of the constitutional election held in the State of Mississippi some months ago was announced, it was generally acquiesced in by the people of the North, as well as those of that State, under the belief, in this section of the country, that a majority of the legal voters of the State were unwilling to reënter the Union under any terms imposed by Congress, and certainly under the Constitution which was submitted to them by the Jackson Convention.

It is possible that the objects and motives of this committee are legitimate; that the Constitution did receive, as its members allege, a clear majority of the legal votes of the people; that the "committee of five" is not a body of mere adventurers, as their opponents allege; and that the State is entitled to representation in the Federal Legislature under the Constitution which they advocate.

"A Foul Nest of Thieves." When Mr. Schenck, in advocating the bill for restoring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, declared his belief that "no reform proposed in the House would be so effective in breaking up a foul nest of thieves as the passage of the bill" in question, he gave expression, in rather harsh language, to the belief of all honest men who are familiar with the iniquities of our present Indian system, and earnestly desirous of promoting the best interests of the aboriginal tribes and of such of the whites as are brought into contact with them.

A Philippic Against Disloyalty. WENDELL PHILLIPS has made his annual visit to Philadelphia, and we congratulate the good people of the city on the fact that his visit is concluded and he himself, in all probability, on his way back to the Hub. These annual visits of the irrepressible and erratic Wendell are usually made about the time of the regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Anti-Slavery Society, of which Wendell is a sort of ornamental honorary member—decidedly more ornamental than useful, we are led to believe.
