

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Portland to Walla Walla—Salmon Scooping—The Delightful Climate and Soil—“Volunteer Crops”—Railroad Feasible—Eastward Ho! From Our Own Correspondent.

WALLA WALLA, WASHINGTON TERR., July 18, 1893. For two days we have been enjoying a semi-resting spell with keen relish. From Portland along the beautiful Columbia river to Walla Walla is 351 miles, and that has been our last stage. The trip was a hard one, going night and day, starting as soon as we could see, stopping when it was dark, sleeping scarcely at all, eating irregularly and sometimes abominable messes, baked in the sun, shaken to pieces—highly!

In some respects we have had enjoyable times. All are in excellent health, and our appetites are the keener, thanks to the delightful climate. Since leaving Portland we have traversed a fine section; one of our party best describes it—though it will sound extravagant to calm Eastern folks—as “251 miles of grass or wheat land, and 251 miles of salmon.” Think of a body at the Dalles scooping thirty-one salmon out of the water, in as many minutes, with a land-net, and some of these imperial fish weighing as much as forty pounds! Don't doubt it; take our word that such glorious salmon fishing is had on the Columbia river. Precisely such fishing I never before saw. On our way up we stopped at evening at the Dalles, and with hand-nets and by prodding with spears, we caught great numbers, averaging from twenty to thirty pounds. Next morning our good Engineer stole a march on us sleepers, and had a “fish” to himself among the Indians. He caught two single ones at two throws, and then he got three at once and landed them safely, though not without some heavy tugging, for they weigh from seventy to seventy-five pounds. Three miles walk, with bagging the fishes, made a good hour's work before 6 o'clock in the morning; and I'll wager you will not match it in the Delaware.

The wonderful climate of this region, so far as we have traversed it, from the Pacific Ocean eastward, has not been overstated. The Pacific warm ocean current, or this in combination with other causes, has ameliorated the climate not only of the seaboard, but essentially for a long distance eastward. In latitude 48 deg. on the coast, and in latitude 46 deg. at this town, we find abundant evidence of the great fact that the winters are mild and comparatively free from deep snow; that all the cereals not only grow but flourish here; that fruits, apples, pears, plums, apricots, raspberries, blackberries, and grapes, yield wonderfully; and that vegetables of all kinds grow to a large size and very abundantly. We have seen the grain, the fruits, and the vegetables, and the soil that produces them. Yesterday we ate ripe black Burgundy grapes raised in the open air, and the white Muscat improves here in the open air.

Have you ever heard of “volunteer crops”? The western end of the Northern Pacific Railroad knows them, and knows them of old. Mr. D., the prosecuting attorney of this county, in 1863 planted potatoes in his garden, and now he can't get rid of potatoes in his garden. Potatoes pursue him, stick to him, won't leave him—potatoes are his fate. Though they are carefully dug out when ripe, yet with all the care given a few little seedlings remain in the ground, and the amiable winter nurses instead of killing them. So on the twenty-second of May the owner, with a groan of dismay, has to submit to new potatoes as large as hen's eggs. In like manner, the prosecuting attorney is prosecuted year after year with dahlias and other bulbous flowers, for the winter helps to give them perpetual growth and bloom.

It is true, however, that such a soil does not exist everywhere. This valley of the Walla Walla appears to be peculiarly favored by nature in climate, soil, and water. It abounds in living streams flowing into the Walla Walla, which irrigate it and make it an immense garden spot. The extent of fine land put in cultivation here within the past ten years is wonderful. There are now eleven hundred voters in this county, and a considerable amount of agricultural products is annually raised, that even now needs railroad facilities for cheap transportation. The country between the Columbia and this town, thirty-one miles, excepting along the immediate valley of the Walla Walla and its tributaries, is unimproved. It is rolling, and in some places quite hilly, having a basaltic-rock foundation. Its surface is dotted with sage, spots of alkaline land, and spots of natural bunch-grass pasture, on which cattle and horses “fatten”—like last winter—with little or no “feeding.” The grass is not green, though owing to a long-continued drought this year it is browner than usual; nevertheless, animals like it and thrive on it. Doubtless there is a large area of pasture country sufficient to maintain vast herds, and much of it is adapted to general agriculture.

Respecting the merits of railroad routes between this point and the Pacific, personal observations have fully established the fact that a line is practicable from Walla, on the Columbia, via that river to the Cowlitz river, and by the valley of that stream over to Olympia, at the head of Puget Sound, which shall have moderate grades all the way. A large part of this distance a railroad can be built at moderate cost; generally the grades will be very little per mile, and the curves easy. The basaltic-rock bluffs along the Columbia river, the high floods forcing the level of the grade thirty to fifty feet above low water, and a few tunnels at the worst bluffs to save cost and curvature, will constitute some miles of heavier work.

At the request of Mayor McAniff and the members of the City Council, our party met some of the citizens of Walla Walla on Saturday afternoon for a frank interchange of opinions relative to the North Pacific Railroad. Mr. Canfield explained very clearly the condition and objects of the advantages of railroad improvements and the increased productiveness of lands and crops thus secured. Dr. Claxton pleasantly referred to his surprise at the delightful climate of such a northern district, and dwelt upon the vast natural capabilities of the section thus far traversed. A committee on statistics was appointed, and their labors will undoubtedly furnish much interesting data in relation to this almost unknown territory.

We expect to leave here on Tuesday morning, and we calculate on travelling from twenty to twenty-five miles per day. If our animals are willing, they have a good deal to say in the matter. The weather is now very warm, reaching in the heat of the day about 100 degrees; but the nights are always cool and pleasant for sleeping. When we fairly get into the regions that are post-office-less, as we very soon shall, you must trust largely to good luck for future letters. NEMO.

NEW YORK ISMS.

NEW YORK, August 12, 1893. Only one circumstance has prevented the New York public being entertained with accounts, by American correspondents of New York newspapers, of The Progress of the Harvard Crew and their entertainment by their Oxford cousins, and that circumstance is that those accounts haven't yet put in an appearance. The New York correspondents may as well have gone to the bottom of the Atlantic for anything that is known of their whereabouts. Not a line, not a syllable, has reached us from them, and the only suspicion that the circumstances leave us to infer is that they have discovered English hospitality to be of that oppressive kind which floors its victim, and instead of leaving him placidly at his writing-table, puts him sweetly under it. The Times, the Tribune, the World, the Herald, have all been waiting in vague expectation for telegrams that have never come. Yesterday afternoon the Evening Post published a half column which purported to be from a private letter. The New York correspondent usually keeps his senses about him, knowing how much depends upon the clearness of his brain and the steady action of his nerves. For once, however, I fear that he has fallen a victim to double X, and that his experiences have become as rare as Old England's roast beef and as bitter as her Bass' beer. Depend upon it, those bloody 'ops, that are indigenous to English soil, have done their business. They have fallen early victims to Alibon's 'arf-an-'arf.

Bankers Sent to the Tombs. Probably no prisoners, in the whole history of the Court of Oyer and Terminer, were more taken aback than were those bankers whom Judge Cardozo sent to the Tombs. Imagine the case. Fancy if you can the rueful visages of these Wall Street bankers, when their sentences of fine and imprisonment were made known to them. You will have some just idea of them, perhaps, if you endeavor to picture to yourself the mental and physical sensations of a teacher's pet scholar who, for the first time, is compelled to undergo public fagellation. Just such sensations as these eddied into expression upon the faces of those Wall street delinquents. Every sentence of the judge was a rankling dart that clove the bull's-eye of their misdemeanor. Fines they would gladly pay—but undergo imprisonment? “They brokers, and suffer such dishonor!” Counsel and client whispered together; surreptitious murmurs bubbled around the court-room; Roman captives, about to pass under the yoke, could not have worn faces depicting greater humiliation. True, only two of the delinquents, Mr. Sage and Mr. Watts, were sentenced to actual imprisonment (the one for five, the other for ten days), but all shared in the dishonor. What was the crime, after all? Usury. Mr. Patton, one of the counsel, very ingeniously protested, indeed, that their schemes for locking up capital were innocent in the extreme. But Judge Cardozo seemed to think that locking up money, in the sense in which the brokers had been doing it, was just as bad as abstracting it. The whole thing, in fact, may have been done in a moment of “abstraction,” but the Judge refused to see it in that light.

Theriacal Items. Miss Madeleine Henriques is in the city, and it is understood, in a quiet sort of way, that she is to be the leading lady at Wallack's during the forthcoming season. The company there will be in many respects a new one. Many of the old members have gone over to Daly's Fifth Avenue palace, of which Mrs. Clara Jennings is leading lady. There she will have the opportunity of gratifying her ambition, and of finding free scope for those versatile talents which, during Miss Rose Eyttinge's engagement at Wallack's, were only allowed subsidiary play. A good leading lady is not by any means an easy acquisition. As a rule, women get very attractive as actresses only just as they begin to cease to be very attractive as women; and it becomes a question which is the most fascinating, the slightly passée woman who, as an artist, perfectly understands her “biz,” or the lovely fresh young thing who spreads herself on her beauty, and has a cornucopia of crudities to remember herself of. Young New York's taste goes in favor of the crude young angel. The artist who is at once perfect and passée is respected, but, as a rule, she don't draw. She may be “immense,” in theatrical parlance, but that don't make the houses so. Even Ristori was called “quite the old lady” when she was here, and one gentle critic spoke ecstatically of her motherliness. Had she been as fond of writing to the newspapers as the smaller fry of the footlights are, I am afraid she would have mothered him. A fine feminine physique is even Gotham audiences smack their lips over. What bloomism may yet revive. There are those who discern an elevating tendency in Terpsichoreanism (especially when the toes are lifted high), and vow that Lydia Thompson's legs, like Thomsian medicines, have a spiritualizing influence.
