

NEW YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent. NEW YORK, June 29, 1870.

The Earthquake. Yesterday I paused, pen in hand, for a considerable time pondering whether I should give to the world of Philadelphia something which an authority that I highly revere had acquainted me with. The something had relation to the shock of an earthquake which he informed me he had experienced. Yesterday morning I read in one of the papers an emotional account of an earthquake, but this was not the one to which my informant referred. His earthquake was another earthquake, and occurred on Sunday morning. The earthquake which has got into the papers, and which one seems to know anything about save the reporter who manufactured it, is said to have taken place on Saturday night at 7 o'clock. On the whole, I think my earthquake is the best of the two. At any rate my faith in it is not shaken, whatever else may have been. It occurred about eleven o'clock on Sunday morning, when good people are in church and homilies are being intimated. My informant resides on Thirty-second street, near Fifth avenue. Whether the house is a brown stone front is not pertinent to the inquiry. It is enough to say that the entire neighborhood experienced shocks, as if all Thirty-second street were a mat with the dust being shaken out, that there was a noise as of burning missiles falling, and that a few of the most venturesome of those out of doors picked up singular bits of stone which they quickly dropped again with burned fingers. At first sight, this looked to me as though it were a boiler explosion, and the hissing missiles were pieces of iron. But when I looked at it again I came to the conclusion that it was an earthquake. It is so natural to the human mind to believe in everything that is unlikely.

Mr. Brougham's Genius. This celebrated speech-maker has just produced at Wallack's a play so exquisitely idiotic that I feel I must detail the plot to you a little more elaborately than I usually do those of new plays. It is as frisky and refreshing as soda-water with the "cool and sparkling" left out. Listen! Have patience with me (or Mr. Brougham) and attune the tympanum: "Minnie Rook," a street singer, whose real name is "Clara Willoughby," has, when an infant, been stolen from her ma by a wretch named "Philip Wexford," who lives off her earnings when she has any, and beats her black and blue when she hasn't. Her distracted ma mourns her loss for sixteen years, and in conjunction with a confidential lawyer, "Mr. Goodwin," unsuccessfully endeavors to discover her whereabouts. In this she is helped by a sensation reporter and interviewer, "Horatio Pryer," who discovers the poor girl in a slum kept by a sentimental bar-tender, who sells the deadliest poison in the way of bad whisky, and talks the sickest cant that ever emanated from mortal mouth. The sensation-reporter takes "Minnie" home to live with him and his wife, and is on the point of restoring her to her long-lost ma. "Minnie" is left alone with the sensation-reporter's wife, when a tall party wearing a long silk dress and a thick veil is introduced and pretends to be the ma in question. But "Minnie" detects something wrong in the party's voice, and the party, seeing he is on the point of being discovered, tears off his bonnet and veil, and reveals himself as the agent of "Wexford," who is bound to get "Minnie" back. The interesting feature of this point is that the would-be lady wears whiskers, that she points a pistol at the head of "Mrs. Pryer" at the conclusion of the act, and looks for all the world like a bearded lady trying to escape from a museum. "Minnie" is borne back to "Wexford's" den, and is condemned by that brute to be strapped to a bed and whipped black and blue by an old black hag named "Cleopatra," but "Cleopatra" discovers, just in time to save "Minnie's" skin, that she ("Cleopatra") is "Minnie's" old nurse, and used to nurse "Minnie" when that young lady was at the lacteal portion of her existence. She therefore straps her up, and only pretends to whip her. In this, however, she is discovered by "Wexford," who is just about to deal the blows himself, when the door is burst open and the sensation-reporter rushes in, liberates "Minnie," ties "Wexford" to the bed, and administers the castigation himself, assisted by a levy of newboys and bootblacks. "Minnie" is then taken and restored to her real ma, and, in the latter's absence, receives as a visitor "Inky Dick," a printer's devil, whom she had known and loved in the slum-singing part of her career. "Inky Dick" brings back the banjo of happier days, and "Minnie" offers to sing one of her old songs upon it, which takes the audience completely by surprise, they not having been subjected to this sort of device more than half-a-dozen times in the previous acts. After the song "Minnie" plays a regular old-fashioned breakdown. At this point it appears that the servants—one butler, one footman, one page, one cook, two housemaids, and two chambermaids—have been listening on the stairs, push the drawing-room doors open, and in they come, the whole kit and crew of them, and have a good dance, just as servants and young ladies of the house do every day in real life. The last act is given up to a ball in which all the villains of the piece are very properly handcuffed and sent to the island, and Miss Lizzie Price, as "Inky Dick," wears, as part of an evening dress suit, a pair of pants that might have belonged to her little brother, but then this is the way Miss Price borrows from real life and remains an artist. Mr. Brougham makes only one speech at the close of every act, but he makes up for this by not having too much to do in the play itself. Seeing he will belong to the stock company at Wallack's next season, he is evidently feeling his audiences in advance. The play went off very well, however; so did the soda-water bottle corks. They were popping up in the gallery all evening, just as naturally as they do at the Bowery. I saw the entire five acts out, from eight until eleven, in order that no one could say with truth that I wrote of something I knew nothing about, and I got up at my usual hour this morning.

Fourth-of-July Amusements. At the few theatres that will be open on the Fourth of July either benefits will be given or entertainments of as new a character as possible will be introduced. To this end, a new troupe of French wrestlers, six in number, has been brought hither by Mr. Colville, of Wood's Museum. The museum, by-the-by, has been doing an extremely fair business, and, truth compels me to say, it deserves to. None of its curiosities amount to much, except Miss Hannah Duke, the fat woman, who amounts to more than I would care about spanning. The most amusing curiosities of the establishment are not to be found in the museum part of the museum. The only genuine curiosities are those upon the stage, which, in that aspect, are "alone worth the price of admission."

Ali Baba. A successful conclusion of the Enterprise—Over 1000 Persons Experience Relief. From Our Own Correspondent. NEW YORK, June 29, 1870. The services of Sunday were interrupted by rain, which seemed to summon "To thy tents, O Israel!" and which acted as a refrigerator to the atmosphere and which hitherto had made this a melting time. Ordinary sermons have been preached, and the usual incidents of experience and children's meetings received a due share of attention. The police present find their occupation gone, and so is mine. The one theme here is "Holiness to the Lord," and no matter what the text or who the teacher, each sermon may be reduced to the exhortation, "Be ye holy," so from one learn all. And then the same faces are seen every day, save some who are leaving. Friday will close the day's labors, and the prayer of the clergy devoutly ascends that "those who have professed here to be crucified with Christ may not be tied up with revival strings, but nailed to the Cross." The Yankee cavalier, quibler, or curious one has been carried over to Maryland Methodism by Mr. Inskip, who is the leader and most remarkable man of the meeting. At least one thousand persons have professed perfect love under his management, and two characters have been converted—a Japanese and a New York prize-fighter.

City Items. PLEASE NOTICE that we make up nothing which we are not satisfied with. Both are a violent remedy, and react violently; producing nausea, headache and prostration. They are often given when they are not needed; and not infrequently they increase the irritation of the brain instead of soothing it. Probably in seventy-five cases out of a hundred in which they are administered, PLANTATION BITTERS, given in moderate doses and at proper intervals, would have the desired effect. Persons who find it difficult to compose their minds to sleep after lying down at night, or whose nerves are disturbed by bad dreams, or are too tired to afford due nourishment, are advised to try the PLANTATION BITTERS as an anodyne; for this comprehensive medicine is not only a tonic and alterative, but a delightful sedative—a "balm of hurt minds," as well as a revivifier of enfeebled frames. Its use, as a means of producing healthy sleep, involves none of the unpleasant secondary consequences of a resort to the former remedies. They all, without exception, excite the stomach; while the effect of the Bitters is to tone, and without irritating that sensitive organ.
