

NEW-YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent. NEW YORK, Aug. 2, 1870. John Real. That John Real will be hung on Friday is as certain as almost any future event can be. The news that the Governor had refused to change the sentence of death which had been pronounced against him into that of imprisonment for life was told him yesterday by the warden of the Tombs, and Real appears to "bear up under" the disappointment with considerable fortitude. He feels, as under the circumstances it is very natural that he should feel, that the murder of Mr. Nathan did not tend to make the Governor lenient. He evidently thinks rather hard of those newspaper representatives who went away from their interviews with him to prepare distorted reports only of all that he had said. He is in that condition when Religion does all that she can for him, and when the World stands by with folded arms and tosses her head at Religion. If the solemn statements of a man to whom eternity is very near are to be believed, he was so persecuted by Officer Smedick that his killing of that officer—involuntary as he believes it to have been—was due to the instinct of self-preservation. In view of these statements Governor Hoffman has been pleased with Real's counsel and friends, and subjected to an amount of pressure such as is seldom exercised by the counsel or friends of a criminal of so humble a class of society. He will die in the Catholic faith, and on the day preceding his execution will probably partake of the communion. There is a good deal of curiosity to see the hanging. Among newspaper offices more than one application has been made for the use of such of the Sheriff's invitations, conferring the office of deputy sheriff, as may not be needed by the reporters.

Amusements—More Particularly Madame Lanner. The ideal home of minstrelism is to be realized in the new opera house that Dan Bryant is building on Twenty-third street, near Sixth avenue. Burnt cork is becoming elegant. The new business is to be glorified. The new Ethiopian theatre, which is to be opened in the fall, will be expensively adorned, the proscenium boxes will be sumptuous, and it is to be presumed that the character of the entertainment will correspond to that of the house. Three of the other theatres will open this month, Booth's and Niblo's on the evening of next Monday week and the Olympic on the 23d. Niblo's has been cleaned and painted. It needed both badly. That silly tangle of impossibilities, The Duke's Motto, is to be the piece first produced there. The only theatrical attractions in this city at present are Madame Lanner and Bertha Lind. I have spoken of the "poetic fade" and "intellectual dancing" of Madame Lanner, but while employing these terms did not forget that they were unusual and liable to be misconstrued. For example, we do not look for intellectualness in dancers. Even the very great ones, the Ellises and Taglionis, evince very little brain cut ure. Life is not long enough to permit them to equally cultivate the heel and the head. The gossip that is babbling in the newspapers respecting Morlacchi's intellectual taste and musical acquisitions is very interesting. I will not undertake to say whether it is true or not; but if it is true, that instance is an exceptional one. Nevertheless, a great dancer may have had something of the education of an actress. In that case the intellect is put to work. She is not all leg, and there is some proportion between the developments of mind and muscle. This seems to be the case with Madame Lanner. Without claiming to "know of my own knowledge," as a lawyer would say, it seems to me either as though she must be intellectual, or, if a somewhat peculiar phraseology be admissible, as though she must have strong intellectual impulses. Figures, steps, and enterprises which in another would seem like the inventions of vulgar audacity are, with her, poetic and refined. There are coarse men who will never see in Terpsichore anything more than an appeal to flesh and passion. For my part I have no objection to define dancing as the language of legs; but I must be permitted to make this discrimination, that the majority of dancers make it a language that corresponds to the diction of those nameless books whose publication is prohibited by law, while a few, like Madame Lanner, invest it with a pure and poetic rhythm. It would be unjust to Miss Lind, however, not to acknowledge that a large proportion of the principal dancing of the evening falls to her. In the new ballet of Silvia, or, The Juggler's Daughter, a trinity of dances, consisting of three in one, and of remarkable character, is interpreted by her to perfection, and creates an enthusiasm that would be unusual in winter time but is extraordinary at this season. The dances are called "The Peasantess," "The Coquette," and "The Sylph." When Miss Lind first appears the peasantess' dress which she wears of course carefully conceals the dresses of the coquette and the sylph. When the first dance is concluded Miss Lind retires, and during the applause slips off the rustic frock, and ere the capping of hands has died out, appears glittering in the exquisite costume of the "Coquette." A similar change of costume characterizes the conclusion of the second dance, and signals her appearance in the third. Each dance has peculiar idiosyncrasies, and is performed by Miss Lind with an ability which while strange-joers in this country are almost entire strangers. The conclusion of the first act of Silvia likewise creates excessive delight. It introduces, without indecency, an approach to the genuine can-can nearer than that made by any other performers who have as yet appeared on the New York stage. This can-can, which, upon the bills, is warty called "quadrille," is pervaded by the refinement of Madame Lanner, and is therefore kept from becoming repugnant. The success with which it has been received is so immense that it ought to be reserved for the last thing in the ballet. Those who see the first act see the best portions, and lose little by going away. The deserved and unusual popularity of Madame Lanner and Miss Lind is my reason for referring to them at such length.

No. 12 West Twenty-third Street is still the object of general contemplation, and will remain so until the murderer is discovered, or until the mystery, with no abatement of obscurity, passes into a tradition and takes its place beside such enigmas as the Bardell-Cunningham and the Rogers assassinations. On my way home from a theatre I passed the house at midnight on Monday. The gas-lamps of the opposite pavement threw their radiance full upon it. Not a ray of light came from any of the windows, but through the glass above the front door the lights in the hall could be seen, and upon these was fixed the gaze of a group of people stationed on that side of Twenty-third street which is bounded by the southern facade of the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Those gossipers who stretch their necks there for an hour at a time fasten upon the most cobwebby of imaginary clues. Now it is Washington Nathan who committed the murder, now Frederick, now both, now neither, now young Kelly, the house-keeper's son, now a hypothetical plumber. Meanwhile, let us hope that Superintendent Jordan and his detectives will keep their own counsel until the doer of the deed is discovered or until all hopes of discovering him are dispelled. ALI BABA.

Dr. D. Jayne's Tonic Vermifuge is such a preparation, not only certain to destroy worms, but most excellent for the purposes of a General Tonic, strengthening the stomach and digestion, and dissipating any febrile tendency in the system. In Dyspepsia, young and old will find it equally effective, and altogether, no remedy of more general application could be kept in the household. Sold everywhere. Small size, 37 cents; double size, 50 cents per bottle.

A MOST DELICIOUS DESSERT may be found in the new article of food, Sea Moss Farine, which can be purchased for twenty-five cents a package, that will produce sixteen quarts of most excellent blanc mange, or a proportionate quantity of custards, light puddings, farina, creams, sauces, gruels, Charlotte Russe, etc. This seems almost incredible, but it is vouched for by ladies of the highest respectability, who append their names to their statements. The company state at least fifty delicious dishes can be made from the Sea Moss Farine, and give in their circular the receipts for many of them. We consider Mr. Rand's discovery a highly important one for the millions, and indeed for all classes of society, in these stringent times.
