FLORAL DISPLAY.

It was in the early seventies that the rage for elaborate floral displays began. The late Sir Edward Scott started London by telling his florists to use as many flowers as they wanted in decorating his house for a ball. The florists were delighted to obey and the result kept London talking for months.

A contemporaneous written agreement referring to a promissory note and providing that the maker may receive the note back on surrendering certain stock, is held in American Gas and V. M. company vs. Wood (Me.), 43 L. R. A. 149, to constitute with the note part of an entire contract the stipulations of which are mutual and dependent rather than independent and collateral. With this case is an extensive note on the effect of the breach of contemporaneous agreements as a defense to promissory notes.

When Consuelo Vanderbilt married the Duke of Marlborough the extravagance of flowers was talked of in two continents. At a private banquet in Washington two years ago two immense balls of roses were arranged to break over the table, and thousands of rosebuds, orange blossoms and lilies were showered on the guests.

"This log hut, with its bare floors, its sufficient. I am set down among the beauties of nature, and in no danger of losing the riches that are scattered all about. No one will take my walks or my brook away from me. Flowers, birds and animals are plentifully provided. I have enough to eat and to wear, and time to see how beautiful the world is, and to enjoy it."

STORY OF "OCEAN MARY."

BABY MASCOT OF THE SEA WON THE HEART OF A PIRATE.

Touch of Nature That saved a Ship and Crew—Child Grew to Womanhood and Her Wedding Gown Was Made From the Pirate's Silk Brocade.

In the village burying-ground at Heniker, N. H., may be seen standing among a dozen slabs of like design a small slate stone, whose inscription, in common with the others, in no manner suggests that the story of the one in whose memory it was set was different from the ordinary affairs of the hillside pioneer.

It is the grave of Ocean Mary. It was years and years ago that the baby mascot of the sea won a pirate's heart.

Precious to 1720, the year in which the principal events of this narrative occurred, many families of Scotch peasantry crossed the north channel and found for a time homes in the larger towns on or near the coast of Ireland. Thus Londonderry became the residence of a large number of Scotch yeomanry.

In those old times of slow ships and many perils of the sea, it was a far cry from Londonderry in Ireland to Londonderry in the granite state; still, Scotland and the Emerald Isle had already sent sturdy pioneers to the new world on the Merimac.

Tradition, often the truer part of history, has failed to save from oblivion the name of the ship which sailed from Londonderry for Boston in July, 1720, but she is said to have been in many respects vastly superior to others of her class in those times. At any rate, long before she dropped anchor off the picturesque coast, many well-to-do families had prepared for the long voyage. Of those who from the deck of the departing ship watched the green shores of Ireland fade from view a large proportion were not only strong of limb, but thrifty and provident.

Out through Louisa Foy's, past Inishowen head and far beyond Giant's Causeway, with favoring winds, sailed the fated ship.

Among the passengers were James Wilson and his young wife. A year before Wilson married Elizabeth Fulton, and they were now on their way to Londonderry, N. H., where land had been laid out to James Wilson as one of the grantees of that town.

In the small vessel settlement to which Wilson and his wife were traveling were friends under whose hands profitable harvests were sown, and a generation was springing up whose influence was to be felt long years after.

Concerning the earlier part of the voyage of the emigrant ship tradition is nearly silent although certain fragmentary accounts hint of a protracted calm and following storm of such violence that the vessel was driven from her course. However that may be, it is reasonably certain that the passage was about one-third accomplished when events transpired that made the voyage memorable in the lives of all on board.

One sultry evening the lookout saw on the horizon a sail standing like a gray silhouette against the early-rising moon. All through the hot summer night the strange craft wore nearer and nearer, and when morning came her low hull could be seen like a black shadow under her full set of canvas.

The pirate was within gunshot of the emigrant ship. To fight or run away was not to be thought of. The ship had not a dozen muskets. They simply waited. They had not long to wait, for boats were soon alongside, and swarming upon the deck, the robbers fell to work as men who knew how to plunder and kill. Crew and passengers were bound and some were left lying where they were captured, and some rolled into corners, just as suited a momentary freak of the invaders.

None were killed. Valuables were gathered into parcels convenient to be transferred to the pirate ship. The robber captain going below to search the officers' quarters, threw open the after cabin door with a rough hand, but seeing a woman lying in the berth, stopped.

"Why are you there?" demanded the ruffian.

"See. The terrified woman uncovered a baby's face.

"A girl."

"You have named her."

"No."

The pirate went to the cabin door and commanded that no man stir until further orders. Then, returning, he went close to the berth where the woman lay, and said gently, "If I may name that baby, that little girl, I will unbind your men and leave your ship unharmed. May I name the girl?"

"Yes."

Then the rough old robber came nearer still and took up the tiny, unresisting hand of the baby. "Mary" was the name the woman heard him speak. There were other words, but spoken so low she could not hear. Only his Maker and his own heart knew, but when the child drew its hand away the mother saw a tear on the pink fingers.

There had been other knights than Bayard. Here was one.

As good as his word, the pirate captain ordered all captives unbound and goods and valuables restored to the places from which they had been taken; then with his crew he left the ship and pulled to his own vessel. But the emigrant ship had scarcely got under way when a new alarm came to them. The pirate was returning.

If they were dismayed at his reappearance they were surprised to see him come on board alone and go directly below to the cabin. There he took from a parcel a piece of brocade, silk of marvellous fineness of texture and beauty of design. Seen at a little distance the effect of the pattern is as of a plaid combining in wonderfully harmonized tones, nameless hues of red and green, softened with lines of what evidently was once white.

Time has, perhaps, somewhat mellowed its color tone, but the richness of its quality is as the richness of pearls.

"Let Mary wear this on her wedding day," the pirate said, as he laid the silk on the berth.

The pirate left the ship and was seen no more. In the fulness of time the emigrant ship reached Boston without further incident. The James Wilson died soon after landing. Elizabeth Wilson, with Mary, soon after went to live in Londonderry, where her friends were waiting for them. Here the widow married James Clark, great-great-grandparent of Horace Greeley.

For years the people of the little hamlet religiously kept July 28 in thanksgiving for the deliverance of their friends from the hands of pirates.

Some time early in the year 1732 Thomas Wallace emigrated to America and settled in Londonderry, where, on Dec. 18 of the same year, he was married to Ocean Mary by the Rev. Mr. Davidson of that town. Her wedding gown was the pirate silk.

A granddaughter and a great-granddaughter have also worn the same dress on like occasions.

Four sons were born to Mary Wallace, three of whom removed to Heniker. There, on a slightly hill, Robert built the house which in his day was far and away the grandest mansion in all the country around. He was a man of large hospitality and intelligent strength of character.

Here Ocean Mary lived many years, and died in 1814 at the age of 94. Her grave is in the Centre burying-ground, about half way down the middle walk, a boyshot distant from the railroad station. The curious visitor may if he choose read the inscription on the slate.

"In memory of Widow Mary Wallace, who died Feb. 13, A. D. 1814, in the ninety-fourth year of her age."

The likeness tradition has left of Ocean Mary is that of a woman symmetrically tall, with light hair, blue eyes and florid complexion, together with a touch of the aristocracy of nature and a fine repose of manner in her energetic, determined and kindly ways.

The house is four miles from Heniker village and about the same distance from Hillsboro. The visitor, if he have an eye for the picturesque, though he regret the decay that has overtaken the old manse, can but be charmed by the beauty of the landscape in the midst of which it is set.

LOSING OR GAINING A DAY.

Difficulty That is Inevitable Under Our Present System of Reckoning.

"Where a Day is Lost or Gained," is the title of a paper in the Century in which Benjamin E. Smith, editor of "The Century Dictionary," tells of the difficulty of reckoning the days of the week, in traveling east or westward.

The difficulty that may lie in a matter apparently so simple is well shown in one of Poe's stories. The obdurate father of the maiden—evidently with the Greek calendar in mind—promises to give her the objectionable swain when three Sundays occur in one week. To his consternation, and the joy of the lovers, this seemingly impossible event indubitably happens when two sea captains appear together upon the sea who have circumnavigated the globe in opposite directions.

As a matter of fact, this bit of fiction represents what is taking place every day in the year, and must continue to occur as long as our present method of reckoning time is retained. And the reason for this is simple and familiar. The civil day begins and ends at midnight, but for convenience of explanation let us assume (as is the practice of astronomers) that the day begins at noon and ends at the following noon. It is clear that the interval of time between two successive noons will be, for us, 24 hours (a day as measured by one complete rotation of the earth) only when we remain on the same meridian. For if at noon on the beginning of Monday we move, say over a space of 15 degrees toward the east, it is obvious that when the sun again stands at noon, for us, only 23 hours will have elapsed since we shall have accomplished one-fourth of his journey for him; that is, Tuesday will begin, for us, one hour too soon. Similarly, if we repeat this eastward movement, Wednesday will begin two hours too soon; and so on until, when our starting point is reached, we shall, in count of days, be just 24 hours ahead in our reckoning. The result will be that, instead of ending the journey in 24 days (as we seem to do) and on a Wednesday, we shall actually complete it in 23 days and on Tuesday. On the other hand, if we move westward, in this way, the reverse will happen; our days, as measured from noon, will be 25 hours long, and we shall actually complete the trip in 25 days and on Thursday. For the stay-at-home, and for travelers returning thus from the east and from the west, there will, accordingly, be no correction in the reckoning; each day perfectly correct by diary or log, and each day of the week—no Sunday simply—will be repeated thrice.

Juliet of Romance and Reality.

A movement is on foot to restore and renovate the tomb of Juliet in Verona, Italy. It is proposed to make the structure just twice as large as it is at present and to continue the small arches which are now only in the front of the structure all along the sides. It is not commonly known, perhaps, that Romeo and Juliet are not creatures of the brain of Shakespeare, but they lived, and loved and died in Verona.

The home of this favorite of Shakespeare's work is still standing in the little town, and there may be seen the famous balcony in which Juliet stood when Romeo breathed his words of love to her.

Verona is the capital of a province in Upper Italy, which has nearly 70,000 inhabitants. It is situated on both banks of the River Adige, which, next to Venice, is the most important and interesting town of ancient Venetia.

It is rather a remarkable fact that, though students of the works of the Bard of Avon have always known of the existence of this tomb, the information does not seem to have been spread to the general public. Indeed, it is probable that most people, while wondering at the beauty of the story, have supposed it to be a fanciful creation of the poet's imagination.

Passing of the Horse.

So soon as nature sees an improvement, there is a change. The candle gave way to electricity. The spinning wheel to machinery, the horse to the automobile. The fact that Hottel's Stomach Bitters has been sold for over half a century, proves its value. There is nothing to equal it for stomach or liver trouble. It cures the stomach, and the only one to cure dyspepsia or weak stomach.

Confidence is seldom lost, but it is often slyly misplaced.
