THE DUTY OF MOTHERS. What suffering frequently results from a mother's ignorance; or more frequently from a mother's neglect to properly instruct her daughter! Tradition says "woman must suffer," and young women are so taught. There is a little truth and a great deal of exaggeration in this. If a young woman suffers severely she needs treatment, and her mother should see that she gets it.

Many mothers hesitate to take their daughters to a physician for examination; but no mother need hesitate to write freely about her daughter, or herself to Mrs. Pinkham and secure the most efficient advice without charge. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

Mrs. August Pfalzgraf, of South Byron, Wis., mother of the young lady whose portrait we here publish, writes Mrs. Pinkham in January, 1899, saying her daughter had suffered for two years with irregular menstruation—had headache all the time, and pain in her side, feet swell, and was generally miserable. Mrs. Pinkham promptly replied with advice, and under date of March, 1899, the mother writes again that Lydia B. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured her daughter of all pains and irregularity.

Nothing in the world equals Mrs. Pinkham's great medicine for regulating woman's peculiar monthly troubles.

Morse with Taste for Dainties. One of the Erie ferryboats leaving Jersey City about 8 a. m., when passenger traffic is heaviest, may usually be seen a gray express horse who has a way of his own of securing dainties. As the ferryboat approaches her slip and the crowd swarms in the wagon way he begins his antics. Getting close to a man in front of him he administers with his nose a push between the shoulders which sends the victim with a rush against his fellow passengers. Then his horseish swings from side to side till from someone who knows his weakness a lump of sugar or an apple is forthcoming. When that has disappeared down his capacious throat the horse is on his best behavior.—New York Sun

INGRATITUDE To the Great Servants of the Commonwealth in Ancient Greece. Probably the early Greeks and particularly the Athenians were least grateful to their great men. There was a predisposition to fickleness and to hasty judgment in the Greek character, as well as a strong jealousy of any individual who seemed likely to attain a preponderating power in the state; and their political and judicial system unfortunately supplied no compensating check. Their leaders were thus sacrificed alike in good and evil fortune, and a list of those who fell victims would be a long one. Aristides (the "Just"), Miltiades, Themistocles, Socrates and Timotheos are a few of the great men who ended their lives in unmerited exile or by judicial murder. Sometimes after defeat there was a general butchery of the unlucky leaders. The Carthaginians were also noted for their ingratitude to the great servants of the commonwealth, and this, no doubt, helped to handicap them in the struggle with Rome, where a wiser policy was pursued. Spain, amongst moderns, has been most neglectful of the just claims of her great men.

AUNT LUCINDIA'S COOKIES. Baker, you haven't, in all your shop, a cookie fit to be tried. For the art of making them came to a stop. When my Aunt Lucinda died, I can see her yet, with her sleeves up rolled. As I watch her mix and knead the flour and eggs, with their yolks of gold, The butter and sugar, just all they'll hold, And spice them with caraway seed.

O, that caraway seed! I see the nook Where it grew by the garden wall, And just below it the little brook With the laughing waterfall. Beyond are the meadows, sweet and fat And flecked with the sun and shade; And all the beauties of earth and air Were in those cookies so rich and rare, My Aunt Lucinda made.

So, add one more to the world's lost arts, For the cookies you make are sad, And they haven't the power to stir our hearts. That Aunt Lucinda's had; For I see her yet, with sleeves uprolled, And I watch her mix and knead The flour and eggs, with their yolks of gold.

Junk-Shop Parties. "Can you tell me where there is a junk shop?" asked a young woman of a patrolman in the East Fifth Street Precinct a few days ago. She was accompanied by half-a-dozen other young women and an elderly woman. "You see," she added, as she noticed the puzzled look on the policeman's face, "we are out on a junk-shop party. It's such fun to rummage around among the curious old things one finds in those places, and then one finds the oddest things to carry off home, and some real useful articles, too, especially in old brass." It appears that girls get together a few friends and go hunting for queer treasures in the curious little holes of junk-shops about the city.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Rarity of Detective Stories. I heard one of Boston's literati and a poet of world-wide reputation say the other night she would give anything to have a good detective story to read; that she was tired of all modern historical novels and pined for an old-fashioned sleuth romance that would afford that delightful contradiction of keeping her so wide awake that she should finally fall asleep reading it. But, alas! the days of Gaboriau and Conan Doyle are over, and a spurious sort of mental excitement is produced by the romance now in vogue. By and by, however, the whirling of fiction will bring back the detective story pure and simple, but we must wait for the present vein to exhaust itself before it can appear.—Boston Herald.

How the Artist Was Called. When Henry S. Watson, the illustrator, landed at Naples, he did not know much about European travel. He had to make some sketches in the villages about Naples, and his experiences have filled him with wonder enough for a lifetime. His old pencil helped him a bit. At one little village inn he tried to get it through the landlord's head that he was to be called early in the morning. He couldn't make himself understood. At last he drew a picture of himself lying in bed, the sun peeping through the window, the clock at the hour of 6 and the chambermaid knocking at the door. Then it was quite plain, and they woke him on the tick.—Philadelphia Post.

AN OILY TASTE. beds kerosene and gets flavor in the eggs. W. Stewart Wise, a fancier and breeder of chickens highest in the art of laying eggs fit for a king, made a discovery the other day. He had been boasting about the quality and freshness of the eggs he sold from his henery. Benjamin C. Bayne gave Mr. Wise an order. The time each egg was plucked from the nest was recorded upon it. This gave Mr. Bayne a proof of the wholesomeness of the breakfast he was to eat next morning. The bacon and eggs were served, but there seemed to be something in the cooking that was not acceptable to Mr. Bayne's taste, and he began to question whether they had been cooked in kerosene oil or if the Standard Oil company had cornered the bacon market and injected into the meat some of its trade mark taste and smells. Examination proved that the cook was in the employ of any oil trust—neither kerosene, olive or axle—and the mystery ended with the uneaten eggs upon the breakfast table. Mr. Bayne, relating his experience to Mr. Wise, opened that gentleman's mind, who said: "I can explain it to you. Who would have thought such a thing was possible?" Then Mr. Wise said that a number of his best chickens had been afflicted with colds. He had had their food impregnated with kerosene oil, which soon cured the brood. This, he declared, had found its way into the eggs. The explanation satisfied Mr. Bayne and the family that the cook had not used kerosene to cook that breakfast, and under the circumstances, they will give Mr. Wise another chance to prove the value of the productions of his hens.—Baltimore Sun.

THE "WHITE DEATH." Remarkable Mist in the Rockies Which Often Proves Fatal. Of all the natural phenomena peculiar to the Rocky Mountain region none is more strange or terrible than the mysterious storm known to the Indians as "the white death." Scientific men have never yet had an opportunity of investigating it, because it comes at the most unexpected times and may keep away from a certain locality for years. Well-read men who have been through it say that it is really a frozen fog. But where the fog comes from is more than any one can say. This phenomenon occurs most frequently in the northern part of Colorado, in Wyoming and occasionally in Montana. About two years ago a party of three women and two men were crossing North Park in a wagon in the month of February. The air was bitterly cold, but dry as a bone and motionless. The sun shone with almost startling brilliancy. As the five people drove along over the crisp snow they did not experience the least cold, but really felt most comfortable, and rather enjoyed the trip. Mountain peaks fifty miles away could be seen as distinctly as the pine trees by the roadside. Suddenly one of the women put her hand up to her face and remarked that something had stung her. Then other members of the party did the same thing, although there was not an insect in sight. All marvelled greatly at this. A moment later they noticed that the distant mountains were disappearing behind a cloud of mist. Mist in Colorado is a cloud of mist.

Ears of Wrong Size. Justin McCarthy and some friends were talking once about a member of the House of Commons. A lady who was one of the company said it was pity for the sake of his personal appearance that he had such very large ears. "Yes," said T. P. O'Connor, the brilliant parliamentary and platform orator, "and the worst of it is that while they are too large for ears, they are too small for wings."

The first collected edition of Chaucer's works was published by Fynson, who issued the first of the three parts in 1538. In 1552 there followed an edition by Thynne, and others appeared in 1561, 1598, 1603 and 1687, to say nothing of that which came from the house of Lincol in 1721, which has the distinction, in the opinion of scholars, of being the worst ever printed. The name of Thomas Tyrwhitt is justly remembered in connection with Chaucer and this by reason of the scholarly edition of the "Canterbury Tales," 1775-8, to which he added information notes and a glossary. Not until Dr. Furnivall produced his six-text volume in 1863, was Tyrwhitt's work as a whole, superseded.—New York Post.

WHAT ANTS DO. There are a good many ants of different varieties on the lot at my country place near Covington, and last year I began to make a systematic study of their habits. I found it a most fascinating pursuit and have resumed it with much enthusiasm during several visits this year. A little investigation will convince almost anybody, I think, that the ant approaches nearer to a man in point of intelligence than any of the lower animals. Some of the things I have seen are so marvelous that I would hesitate to speak of them if similar wonders had not been fully recorded by trained scientists. Near one of my flower beds is a colony of small red ants that are extremely industrious in collecting food, and they frequently perform the most astonishing engineering feats in transporting heavy burdens to their homes. Not long ago I watched a party of about a dozen that had found the body of a small spider, and were dragging it toward the nest. The spider had hairy legs, which struck out in every direction and caught on obstacles, greatly retarding progress. For several minutes the ants rolled away with their awkward booty, and then stopped and seemed to hold a council. A minute fragment of dry leaf was lying on the ground; presently they all laid hold and pulled the spider on top of it. They then seized the edges and slid it along without difficulty. On another occasion I saw a large body of these same ants start out for a raid on another colony. They marched like an army, with scouts thrown out at the sides, and when several feet distant from the nest, divided into two parties. One kept straight on and was soon engaged in fierce combat with the other tribe, while the second detachment made a detour and fell upon the hill from the rear. The result was a great victory for the invaders. Anybody that feels interested in the subject and that will put in a little time at close study, will be certain to witness exploits fully as astonishing as those I have described.—Times-Democrat.
