Lewis' Sulphuret Steel Dust.

Those who, having used and tested the value of this medicine and tonic, are respectfully notified that it can now be obtained at the drug emporium of L. L. Lyons, New Orleans.

To the uninitiated and skeptical, I have reason to remark that in putting my Sulphuret of Steel before the public as a valuable compound, I have deviated from the usual path laid down by the whole community of inventors of the best and surest anti-dilatory and best-tonics, etc. I allude to their secrecy of ingredients. I have no secret in my offering. I ask for none. This preparation is simply a steel brought to a fine dust without the intervention of acids. The mode is a little intricate, but simple when understood.

I much doubt if it will be denied, that iron occupies a larger list of its combinations as a medicine in the Materia Medica than any other ingredient, either mineral or vegetable. I claim from every diplomatic physician an indorsement of iron as a valuable medicine and tonic, and I take the unauthorized liberty to say, from experience, that with the last five or six years many of the physicians in the vicinity where this medicine was first introduced, in cases where iron was required, this Sulphuret was universally preferred on account of its easy admixture with other ingredients and usually known strength.
