OUR ANNUAL STATEMENT.

On the 1st of September 1877. The first of September the Democrat will issue a correct, concise and comprehensive statement of the commerce of the city of New Orleans during the past year, made up and compiled by gentlemen whose facts and figures cannot be disputed by the commercial community.

This issue will also contain several exhaustive essays on Agriculture, Railroads, Manufactories and on commerce in general.

We earnestly solicit the patronage of our friends on this occasion, and those of them who wish to send papers to their constituents would do well to send in their orders as soon as possible.

The advantages which the Democrat offers to its patrons in point of circulation and popularity are second to those of no other paper in New Orleans.

As an advertising medium it is unsurpassed.

Some people are fond of denying that there is any such thing as "luck," but that as it may, there certainly are persons to whom what seems like fortuitous good fortune comes.

Col. Groen Wilkinson gave a seat in his pew in London to an old gentleman, who left him $40,000 a year. A young Bostonian crossed to England three or four years ago, and got into conversation with an elderly gentleman who observed that he found they had the same name. It turned out that they were second cousins. The elder had gone to California in the early days, made a vast fortune, and entirely lost sight of his relatives.

That chance meeting gave the young Bostonian a fortune of between two and three millions. And to give one more, a quite recent instance. A young New Yorker went to San Francisco to seek the fortune which so many have failed to find. He got a poor clerkship, and had to be thankful for that. One evening at a place of entertainment he watched a game of cards, saw that an elderly Englishman was being cheated, exposed the fraud, and had a tussle with the cheat. The Englishman has presented him with $20,000 to start him in business, and there is every prospect that more are to come.

Many other examples of like returns for favors and acts of kindness, rendered during life to old men, might be cited, but hardly any one which has more of romance and of impressiveness as illustrative of the power of gratitude than that which is associated with that splendid row of buildings extending from Royal to Bourbon street, known as the Touro. The annual rent of this row, to the present proprietors, a few years ago, was about $100,000. These proprietors, the heirs of R. D. Shepherd, are the largest property holders and taxpayers in this city. Their title to this property was derived by their grandfather from that noble old philanthropist Judah Touro, who in his will bequeathed the residuum of his property, after the payment of his special legacies, to his old friend R. D. Shepherd, for whose kindness and care of him, when wounded in the defense of this city, on the 1st of January, 1815, he owed the preservation of his life. That bequest made R. D. Shepherd and his heirs the largest property holders in this city. The Touro row is a monument of the gratitude of an Israelite who was indeed without guile, and of the fidelity of a Christian who, at great risk to himself, rendered an act of kindness to a supposed dying man. When Mr. Shepherd repaired to the spot in the open field where the mutilated and fearfully wounded body of his friend lay, deserted by surgeon and every one else, and, lifting him on his shoulders, bore him to a cart, in which he brought him to the city, he not only exposed himself to great physical peril, but incurred the displeasure and threatened arrest of his superior officer for turning aside from a public duty to discharge one of humanity and friendship. Commodore Patterson, whose order Capt. Shepherd was engaged in executing at the time he was called away to assist his unfortunate friend, at a dinner party, given some time after the evacuation of the State by the British, said to Mr. Shepherd: "I ought to have had you shot for not proceeding to bring those stone masons I sent you for to strengthen my batteries, but when I learned what turned you aside, I should, after shooting you, have had a monument erected to your memory as a faithful friend and true Samaritan." This incident reminds us of a story lately told of the Emperor of Russia. The Emperor had to pass on a sentence of a court martial, condemning the Grand Duke Alexis, who, as a naval officer commanding a detachment of sailors sent to the relief of a burning ship, disobeyed the signal to abandon the ship until he had rescued and placed in boats all of her crew and passengers. The Emperor thus briefly endorsed the finding of the court: "The proceedings and sentence of the court martial in the case of Midshipman Alexis are approved. God bless my son!"

ALEXANDER.

MR. TURVEYDROP ON EXECUTIONS.

The gentlemanly behavior of Mr. Guidry on the occasion of his recent hanging was extremely gratifying to his large circle of admiring friends, and did great credit to the guardians and preceptors of his youth—who doubtless felt a pardonable pride in his handsome deportment—and, also, to the community in which he acquired and practiced the graceful amenities that were so admirably and strikingly displayed under such interesting circumstances.

We say it with grief and with a high-shouldered bow, that we are not what we used to be in the point of deportment. We have degenerated. But a leveling age is not favorable to deportment. It develops vulgarity. The truth of this observation met with a sad illustration in the beastly behavior of the late members of the association known to the vulgar as the Molly Maguires, on the recent melancholy occasion at Mauch Chunk. It must be peculiarly gratifying to the people of the South, and especially of this State, to note the contrast between the conduct of Mr. Guidry, a native of Louisiana, whose deportment was fashioned by our own peculiar social culture, and that of these "fine old Irish gentlemen." Mr. Guidry's bearing might well have attracted the attention of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and any amount of admiration that the "first gentleman of Europe" might have lavished on our late fellow-citizen would have been appropriately bestowed. As the Times very justly observes:

His manner was so simple and so evidently indicative of the actual solemnity of the occasion as to call forth a general expression of sympathy and approval. The affair was, in short, a highly satisfactory innovation on the prevalent style of hangings, and suggests the idea that a few more of such executions would have a very beneficial effect.

It is to be regretted that the government does not always manifest a nice discrimination in selecting proper persons to occupy the most trying and conspicuous position on such sacrificial occasions. It is not necessary to suggest why too much care cannot be taken in this respect. The gallows is an old and respectable institution, held in great veneration by the people, and by reason of the striking and imposing character of the spectacles it presents, must have a profound influence on popular manners and morals. It must be plain, then, that whenever it is desired by the government to use it for the purpose of impressing a lesson upon the public, only those gentlemen should be selected to exemplify its teachings, who know how to behave themselves with propriety and becoming simplicity, and in a manner truly "reflective of the actual solemnity of the occasion." Well may we inquire what is to become of the deportment of mankind, if all sorts of coarse, vulgar and emotional creatures are to be indiscriminately thrust thus prominently and impressively before the public. We agree with the Times that a "few more such executions would have a very beneficial effect," and, while commending the Governor for the wise discrimination he has shown in presenting such an admirable and cultured person as Mr. Guidry to the public in connection with the moral and social spectacle of the day, we must insist upon a similar discretion upon all future occasions; or we shall soon be eating peas with our knives, or perhaps blowing our noses with the napkins and picking our teeth with the forks. Ah! there are but few of us left, and we see nothing to succeed us but a race of weavers.

MR. SELPH DECLINES.

When all the circumstances are taken into consideration, we are disposed to believe that Mr. Selph's course in declining the appointment on the American team in the international match, is to be commended. Under the terms established for the selection of the team, two members are to be appointed, and the rest are determined by competition. The New Orleans riflemen have not been encouraged to enter into this competition, and, indeed, the regulations governing it are such as to justify the belief that they were adopted with the purpose of excluding competition from all except the Eastern States.

It is by no means improbable that at least three of the places on the team would have been won by New Orleans men, and this circumstance would have been quite as mortifying to the New Yorkers who have heretofore composed the American teams, as would be a defeat by the English in the international match. Making up their team in their own exclusive way, they can very well afford to offer one of the appointive places to Mr. Selph, who has by immense odds the champion practice score of the world. He would be an immense acquisition to their team, but we think that he has shown the true sense of noble obligation in declining a place except after competition, and electing to remain with his club. There are three other gentlemen in New Orleans who have tied the score of Jewett, of New York, and one other, Mr. Eyrich, who has beaten it. There is every reason to believe that the New Orleans team will beat the score of the winners at Creedmoor, but this prospect might be endangered if Mr. Selph were lost to the team. Such a victory will naturally be more gratifying to these gentlemen than any they might contribute as members of an American team in an international match, and we can but feel admiration for the pluck they show in fitting themselves as a club against the marksmen of the world. We wish them all success, and honestly believe that they will attain it.

It is to be hoped that our people will show their full and hearty appreciation of the honorable distinction these gentlemen have won, and of the bold endeavor they are committed to, by making a grand success of their entertainment to-day. Their achievements are a just source of pride to the people of this community, and it would be a gross evidence of all lack of public spirit if they should not have it placed in their power to attend the meet at Creedmoor as a team, simply for the lack of the funds to pay their expenses. We feel assured, however, that such will not be the case. Yet, let no one take this for granted, and fall to contribute his mite by attending the sports to-day.

THE INVESTIGATION RESOLUTIONS.

The proposition of Administrator McCaffrey for the appointment of certain committees of outside associations and corporations to investigate charges against the administration of certain departments of the city government, was happily met by Administrator Denis in his brief and pointed remarks in opposition thereto.

Unquestionably the courts and the Legislature are the proper bodies to examine all such charges, and it is quite a descent from the dignity and many sense of propriety of the administrators to call in unauthorized parties to inquire into and pass upon their acts.

Administrator Denis might have added to his lucid statement for rejecting this proposition of Mr. McCaffrey, that it is not customary for public officials, especially those elected by the people, to give heed and consideration and direct an investigation to be had of every idle and unsupported charge and imputation upon the integrity of their administration. Let them require any such charge to be specifically made and indorsed by some responsible parties, and then let them be investigated by the legal tribunals. If such charges have the sanction of any member of the city government the remedy and the mode of investigation are provided for in the city charter.

Any Administrator implicated in such charges is liable to impeachment and dismissal from office, but such impeachment must be pursued by the regular methods established by law, and not based on mere rumor and the irresponsible scandals which are too often put in circulation against all public officials. We advocate and defend the strictest vigilance and wisest criticism of all officers, but we have no respect or indulgence for scandals originating in selfish disappointment or schemes of self-advancement and the gratification of personal or political malice.

The death of the venerable George Woelper, which occurred Tuesday, following so quickly that of his son, our esteemed friend, William Woelper, will be sincerely mourned by a large circle of relatives and friends. He was a native of Maryland, had resided in this State over forty years; was especially identified with the early fortunes of the old City of Lafayette and the Fourth District of New Orleans, and throughout his long residence had always shown himself a patriotic, liberal and faithful citizen, true, honest and generous in all the relations of life, and just and honorable in the discharge of all the duties of a good citizen.

Four British ships of war, bearing the formidable names of Flamingo, Condor, Shannon and Agincourt, have been ordered to the Black Sea and the Danube, to take position at or near the mouth of the latter, to guard British interests. The right to do this is claimed under a treaty with which Russia is a party. But it may be objected that it is rather late to assert this right after the Russians have passed the Danube, have entire control of both banks, have, in fact, made it the point d'appui of their movement towards Constantinople. If Great Britain intends to intervene, it is certainly good strategy to establish a battery in the rear of the Russian army, whilst her main naval force concentrated in the Dardanelles will confront the great army of the Grand Duke pressing on Adrianople thence to Constantinople. The indications thicken that John Bull intends to stop this foolishness.

Hitherto the difficulty in this city has been to get citizens to discharge public duties required of them. There has always prevailed here a great inclination and desire on the part of all our political fellow-citizens to reduce their sphere of labor and responsibility as much as possible when paid regular salaries. When paid by the job, perhaps, this shrinking modesty is not so conspicuous. But the care and trouble of power and patronage have always been great objections to holding offices by quiet citizens having their own private affairs to look after. We have now the rare example of a public official who is a notable exception to this prevalent disposition of the citizens generally. This is Administrator McCaffrey, who has gone into court and sued out a writ of injunction against Administrator Cavanac for this, to wit: That the latter is proceeding in a most wrongful manner, by virtue of an illegal resolution of the City Council, to assume unto himself and discharge the labors and functions which rightfully appertain to the office and franchise of him, the said McCaffrey, as Administrator of Improvements; and though this super-serviceable, assumption by Administrator Cavanac would vastly lighten the burden and care of the enjoiner, he will never consent to any such intrusive kindness, and asks the court to order Cavanac to abstain from any interference with the valuable franchise of superintending the bridges of the city.
