An Honest Explanation.
[From the Boston Courier.]
Poultry Dealer—How does it happen that all the turkeys I bought from you have their crops filled with shot?
Craze—Filled with shot?
P. D.—Yes, as full as they could hold. Now, you know I'm not going to stand any business of that kind. If—
C.—Don't be hasty, mister, don't be hasty. I'll tell you how that happened. Instead of cutting off the turkey's head and running up the place with their blood, I took my old gun—she's a feather—she loaded her up, an' 'jist shot them fowls one by one. That did the job for 'em an' I had the sport into the bargain.
P. D.—But that doesn't explain the presence of shot in their crops.
C.—Why, arter it does, mister. I'm a pretty good shot you see, an' I aimed at their breasts an' every bird's breast must hev lodged in their stomachs.

Simply Bruised.
[From the St. Paul Globe.]
Young Doctor—You say you have a pain in your side?
Patient—Yes.
"How long have you been troubled with it?"
"Since last night. I was walking downtown about 9 o'clock. All of a sudden I felt a sinking sensation on"—
"Killey!"
"And then all was dark. I ha"—
"Easy sure, go on!"
"I had stepped into a coal hole."

Only a Trifle.
[From the Norwich Bulletin.]
The murderer of the man who was shipped to Chicago in a carriage sent by rail may be identified by a lock of hair found in the carriage beside the corpse. Trifles like hair are sometimes of great importance.
