

ONE YEAR OLD.

(Continued from Second Page.) that there shall be no mistake in judgment as to the value of news. All-around athletics have also received space and attention and all special events like those in other sporting departments, been covered through the paper's own chosen service.

No paper has ever had a more efficient news-gathering system for covering the country than that which has contributed to the success of this Extra. Special wires running straight into the office and attached, each one, to a clicking machine, each with its own operator, have given the establishment in its busiest moments the appearance of a miniature Western Union.

As an instance of the efficiency of the paper's telegraphic resources it may be mentioned that during a recent interesting game at Kansas City the office had a special wire extending directly to the Western city's ball grounds over a circuit of 2,000 miles.

This is only one section out of a complicated piece of enterprise, but it is an instance of the thoroughness which characterizes the whole affair. As exhibiting its promptness in placing its Sporting Extra before the public, THE EVENING WORLD points with pride to the following record, comparing the time of the appearance of its own extra, day by day, with that of a contemporary's sporting edition. The days on which THE EVENING WORLD appeared the earlier are given in the first table, with the number of minutes by which it preceded its contemporary, while in the second table appear the days and minutes in which the other extra took the lead.

Table with columns: Date, Minutes ahead of contemporary, Date, Minutes ahead of contemporary. Rows include dates from Mar 31 to May 24.

THE RECORD OF THE EVENING WORLD EXTRA'S RECORD. The records on the days when our nearest real competitor's extra edition appeared first were as follows:

at the club-house on the Polo Grounds on Tuesday, Oct. 2. After an appropriate speech of presentation by a representative of THE EVENING WORLD, Manager Metrie gracefully acknowledged the testimonial.

THE WORD-BUILDING TOURNAMENT.

An Interesting and Successful Orthographical Contest. On the same afternoon the temper of the bats were tried upon the field, and they knocked out some magnificent base hits, winning the game from Detroit. And in the last Chicago series the same sticks helped make the runs that foreclosed New York's big mortgage on the pennant.

NOVEL instance of the gathering of news was afforded on the day of the execution of the Whyo leader, Dan Driscoll, which THE EVENING WORLD furnished the public far in advance of its rivals. The victory was achieved by an ingenious method never before used in journalism, and by which not only time and space, but the steel bars and massive walls of the Fombs were overcome.

One of THE EVENING WORLD's young men was stationed on the roof of a lofty tenement on Leonard street, from which he could obtain a view of the prison-yard close to the gallows, where the reporters stood. Two blocks further downtown, on a lofty shot-tower, stood another EVENING WORLD young man, commanding a view of both the roof of the tenement and the windows of THE EVENING WORLD editorial rooms, where sat a third man, looking through a pair of field glasses. As the drop fell the reporter in the Tombay yard fluttered his handkerchief. The young man on the top of the tenement promptly waved a red flag, at which the man on the shot-tower also waved a flag. This was seen by the man with the field glasses, and thus in less than two seconds from the time the drop fell the news of it was in THE EVENING WORLD office.

"SEEKING A JOB." How an "Evening World" Reporter Put Himself in the Place of the Unemployed. That Notable Series of Articles by the Leaders of the Trades.

THE army of unemployed in this city, estimated at nearly 100,000 persons, found, the articles on "Seeking a Job" a great boon. Recognizing the difficulties that beset a young man in search of a position the EVENING WORLD sent out a reporter who devoted a whole week to the search for a situation.

He took a list of advertisements of "help wanted" and indefatigably tramped to the addresses given, visiting dry-goods stores, hat stores, clothing stores, mercantile houses and manufactories until he had secured four separate situations and obtained the promise of others.

From the experience gained in these trips a summary of the qualifications necessary to success was given, together with advice which could not fail to be of great value to all out of employment.

OUR ART DEPARTMENT. Those Novel Sporting Cartoons and Its Other Good Work. In all the paths which THE EVENING WORLD has entered during its first year, its artists have been with it. How their works have embellished the paper and added the force of striking illustrations to that of clearly worded narrative and pleasant opportunities to notice.

FROM THE CITY'S WHIRL.

DRIFT CAUGHT HERE AND THERE BY "EVENING WORLD" REPORTERS. Queer Fancies of Men Whose Minds Are Unhinged by Drink.

MAN sat on a bench on a Jersey City ferry-boat early this morning, doubled up and apparently asleep. He was a typical "bum," but the collar of an old undershirt was turned up about his neck, and his hands were thrust in his trousers pockets.

A reporter's attention was attracted to the fellow because every little while he would lift his feet off the floor. At each repetition of this movement the face was lifted higher and higher, and the face was anxiously or terror-stricken, although the eyes remained closed.

A well-dressed young man, who was brought to Bellevue Hospital in a carriage after a long debauch, imagined that he was the central office of a great telegraphic system and that he was punctured with wires.

Another patient in his delirium imagined that a butcher stood over him, knife in hand, about to cut him into roasting pieces. The butcher's personality changed twenty times a minute, and the agony of the sufferer was intense.

THE Size Is Gone from Chinneys and the Romance from Their Sweeping. A negro man was standing at the corner of an uptown street. Behind him was the paraphernalia of a bootblack, and back of that was a sign which read: "Boot-Blackening and Chimney-Sweeping."

"You!" exclaimed the reporter, with the dimly five-foot darky on his actual retina. "You don't climb through a chimney, do you?"

"No," said the reporter sadly, as he reflected that he did not even as much of a house as is represented by a chimney. "A lamp chimney is all I've got in that line. Who do the chimney-sweeping?"

"Excuse me! Haven't you mistaken the umbrella?" It was a pale, bearded, wet-looking young man who made the remark to a fat woman who had clutched at a wooden-handled umbrella as she rose to leave the L train, in the pouring rain of a recent night.

"MORAL: INSURE IN THE TRAVELERS."

lockman said I ought to give him a quarter for giving it storage in his cab.

"When the Hoboken ferry reached the New York slip I was standing near the iron gate with my umbrella raised over my head. The gate goes up instead of drawing back when the passengers get off. I wasn't expecting this and it caught my umbrella and broke two of the ribs. No one saw it, and I didn't want that fat woman to take it away right before my eyes in that thoughtless fashion."

Philadelphia Ought Not to Let Such People Loose. "Up with your hands! I am a desperado, and when I say 'Up!' your hands must obey," said a man who plunged into a Broadway horse-car the other day. He had on a slouch hat and his breast was adorned with dahlias. He had a wild but not very ferocious appearance. Nobody threw up their hands, but two or three ladies in the car looked nervous.

The Race in Which the Billy Goat Beated the Little Boy. On Fifty-ninth street, by the park, the other day, an EVENING WORLD reporter was strolling along when he saw a novel race in progress. The idea seemed to have been caught from Barnum's circus, where the man races with a horse, and beats him, as a rule.
