LONDON & LIVERPOOL CLOTHING COMPANY, 86 and 88 Bowery, Corner Hester Street.

OUR GREEN EDITION.

Received Everywhere with Demonstrations of Approval. The Demand for Them Far Exceeded the Supply.

Run! Crowd! Jostle! Struggle! Why was it that a thousand boys, each yelling like ten thousand, filled the street last evening from 4.30 to 6.30 o'clock?

Why was it that they swarmed into the alley and poured out again with an eagerness that only the business boy of the streets possesses? When they came out they bore big and little bundles of green paper, and they shouted lustily: "EVENING WORLD Sporting Extra; buy the green paper!"

In inference to that large portion of the people of New York who were commencing the day, The Evening World has published its Sporting Extra in green paper, and they appreciated the compliment paid to them by The Evening World, and the "green extra" went off like the dew before the morning sun.

The boys, big and little, were on hand early, and jostled each other in the distributing room and out in the street, and behind the check windows exchanging brass checks stamped with figures for the money of the clamoring new boys.

These checks, of the amount from two to 500 papers, and are sold in advance to the boys in order to expedite the delivery. Checks for over $6,000 of the green extra were sold yesterday, but after we began to check for another $3,000 were cashed in at the windows. But the balance of the boys simply retained their checks for another day, as they are good until used.

This morning there were a hundred boys at this office anxiously inquiring for the green papers. Offers of from one to ten cents a copy were made by the youthful merchants, but no green papers could be had for love or money. "St. Patrick's edition, I swear," said a stout jolly German broker in the Hoffman House, when the first bright streaks of light roused into that popular hostelry with his bundle of green Extra Edition EVENING WORLD under his arm, last night. "Give me ten of them," and as the little lad handed the papers over to him the broker explained to the friends who were drinking with him: "I have a number of Irish friends in the West, and for fear they will not get this I will send them each a copy or two. It is the greatest enterprise of the age."

HURLED DOWN SHAFT 15.

ONE MORE VICTIM ADDED TO THE AGUE-DUCT'S LONG LIST.

An Iron-Loaded Cage Throws Patrick Harty from a Swinging Ladder—His Crushed and Mangled Body Ricked Up at the Shaft's Bottom, Sixty Feet from Daylight—An Unhappy Passage Over Death.

In the chilly gray of a dawning day a man in the prime of life goes to his daily toil. He is a laborer employed on the new Aqueduct. He works at shaft 15, just back of the picturesque country town of Hastings on the Hudson. He is a few minutes late. His comrades have all descended the yawning hole in the ground before him.

The case used to lower them from and bring them to the surface of the earth is being used in lowering iron pipe into the bowels of the earth. It is sixty feet to the bottom of the shaft. The late arrival's only way of reaching it now is by a series of rickety ladders joined to each other by ropes and wires. Unhesitatingly he begins the descent, his dinner pail on his arm, his soft hat pulled down over his eyes, his blue shirt open at the neck, his colorful pants in top boots.

A miracle only will save his life. Miracles occur but seldom in this age, and none intervenes now to save his life. The swinging cage slams him like a feather on the ladder, and with his death shriek echoing and re-echoing through the cavern, he goes bounding down, striking here and there against the rocky sides, until he falls a shapeless mass of bleeding flesh and broken bones among his comrades in the hole. They didn't know who the unfortunate was at first. Daylight never seen down there. The only light emanates from the covered candles carried in the hands of their hats. Still a man killed in the aqueduct is not enough to disturb their equanimity to any great extent. The murderous iron cage comes down more slowly and is unlocked. Then the shattered body is tumbled into it and drawn up to the surface.

CROWDED LECTURE ROOMS.

Another Series of Popular Talks in the Public Schools. The series of free lectures in the public schools given last evening in accordance with The Evening World's bill, was even more than usually interesting, and seven school-rooms were crowded. An entirely new lecture was that given by Prof. Sieben Helm, at 118 Broome street, on "Microscopic Life on the Seashore." His interest was increased by the exhibition on several microscopes of a number of living objects, zoophytes, specimens of seaweeds and corals.

Every one took kindly to the timely courtesy which prompted The Evening World to issue its extra edition in the favorite color of the green soil. "I'll bet that on the Fourth of July next," remarked a mechanic to a friend in the elevated room in the hearing of an Evening World reporter. "Perhaps he will prove to be a true prophet. Reporters, who are the best judges of rapid journalism, were charmed with the green edition. Popu ar "Billy" Kenny, of the Times, bought fourteen for himself and his friends in the reporters' room in the City Hall.

HUNTING EVIDENCE AGAINST STEIN.

Capt. McCullagh Will Then Get a Warrant for the Concert Hall Proprietor. Rudolph Stein's concert saloon, at 36 First street, where the singer, Babbette Stein, or Alice Cordes, as she was known there, died on Sunday night, was closed as tight as a drum when an Evening World reporter called there this morning. Friends of Stein say that after his license expired on March 1 he applied for another, which was made out and ready for him, but which he could not obtain for want of ready cash.

Not Buried Alive by Any Means. The friends of Deputy Coroner Philip E. Donlin had lots of fun quizzing him this morning over the report in a morning paper that being somewhat in a hurry a few days ago he wrote out burial permit for a baby that, he was reported as saying, "was going to die anyhow." The war-battered Deputy Coroner was much disturbed over the report, and insisted upon showing his quizzing friends the papers in the case, which entirely dispelled the published story.
