TO SLAY BY WIRE.

The Dread Chamber Prepared for Electrical Execution.

Appliances for Inflicting the Penalty of Death.

Environment of a Condemned Criminal's Last Days.

As the curious visitor trundles down the winding road that leads from the village to Sing Sing to the ancient prison on the river front, taking in the variegated scene as he goes, his eye may note what appears to be an ordinary telegraph wire that stretches from insulator to insulator along the whole length of the main building within the walled enclosure.

It is a telegraph wire, pure and simple, but the message which it is designed to convey is neither one of joy nor sorrow.

No whisper of glad tidings will ever be transmitted over that wire; no reassuring news of home to the imprisoned recipient. Its message is death!

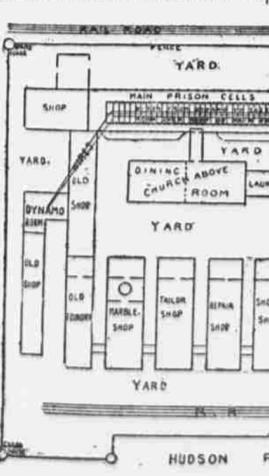

REAR OF HOSPITAL, SHOWING ELECTRICAL EXECUTION ROOM.

Four men, every one of them in the full vigor of life and young manhood, are now awaiting this dismal prison.

Charles McIlvaine, Joseph Woods, Shick Jugzo and James J. Slocum—a child of the slums, a colored aqueduct laborer, a fiery Japanese sailor and a dissolute young man who was once a famous ball-player.

Each is condemned to death for the sacrifice of human life to murderous passion—McIlvaine and Jugzo listlessly awaiting the results of the efforts of their counsel to obtain for them new trials, Woods and Slocum sentenced to death within two weeks—all hoping vainly that hope which springs eternal in the human breast! Hoping against hope! Hoping while men are busy preparing the implements of death!

The visitors and led them into the sanctum of Clerk A. L. Babcock, a tiny little desk, with space enough behind for the clerk and before it for two persons to stand.

pretty young woman, who might be his sister, but she is so young and so beautiful that he might be his sister if they were not so young. They retired before the visitors, and then the genial Warden began to talk business.

"You've come to see how we shall take the lives of the four poor fellows up in the solitary cell, eh? Well, there isn't much to tell, and Major Connaughton can tell it better than I. Rheumatic gout, an old friend of mine, has been making a protracted visit to my house, and I've had to perform most of my duties in my apartments lately.

Warden Brush. "I visited his cell daily when he first came here in December. Some days he seemed lively enough, and talked a good deal about his old friends and old haunts."

Mr. Simon's impressions of Berlin were extremely favorable. He was struck by the imposing aspect of that city, and thinks the Prussian cavalry are without an equal.

Why Women Do Not Take Kindly to the Drug Store Business. A State Street druggist, who is connected with one of the colleges of pharmacy, said to a Chicago Tribune man:

"I know of but three women pharmacists in the city; there were more. One of these is a married woman who has charge of the store owned by her husband. I don't know whether the other two are in the business for which they were educated or not.

I do not know why there are not more women in the drug business. It seems to me that a woman who is a graduate of a college of pharmacy and who is a graduate from a pharmacy would seem to begin as a bottle-washer. But aside from that there is no reason why there should not be more women druggists.
