

SEA LOUSY Young Mamie Murphy Savagely Stabbed to Death by Her Lover.

Found Drinking in a Saloon with Policeman Sciford.

Her Dying Grasp Prevented the Murderer's Capture.

"Don't Hurt Him!" the Last Plea of the Beautiful Victim.

Awful Morning Tragedy in Chris Johnson's Sixth Avenue Resort.

Fast men and frail women were drinking hard in Chris Johnson's saloon, corner of Ninth street and Sixth avenue, at 12.45 o'clock this morning, when Charles Jackson abruptly ended the debauch by driving the big blade of a pearl-handled pocket-knife into the throat of his ex-mistress, Mamie Murphy.

Blood gushed in a stream from the wound and saturated her murderer's clothes.

He sprang for a side door, and Policeman Chester L. Sciford, of the Charles street station, whose night it was, drew a pistol and cried "Stop there!"

Jackson raised the trigger, but before he could fire her arm sprang at him and threw her arms about his neck, almost with her last breath gasping: "Don't hurt him! Don't hurt him!"

The girl held on to the policeman, rolling over on her back.

Her life blood stained Sciford's coat, waistcoat and trousers. He was in citizen's dress.

He put his pistol in his pocket and rushed after the murderer, who had turned in an ambulance call.

Going back to the saloon he found the bartender, the girls and the other men, partly sobered by the awful tragedy, gazing at the girl, who was dead as a stone before their eyes.

There was a spring gash on the right side of her neck, and the blood was running so fast that every one could see the fearful wound, and they watched the blood as it welled up like bubbling springs from a hole near the barroom floor.

Views of the street spread rapidly at the early hour of the morning, and soon the small back room where the murder occurred was crowded with policemen, reporters and curiosity seekers.

At 1 o'clock a Bellevue hospital ambulance with flashing red lights came to the door.

The young surgeon, instrument case in hand, hustled into the room and quickly examined the fatal wound.

He wrapped cotton and laid around her throat to stop the flow of blood, and then remarked: "Locally!"

"She's gone," the doctor said.

Mamie opened her brown eyes once, gasped and died.

Seventeen months ago Mamie Murphy met Charles Jackson in a saloon on Broadway, and they were mutually attracted and went to live together. They boarded at 52 Henry street.

Jackson was a gambler and a morning paper and made good wages.

He seemed to love Mamie very much, but was miserably jealous of her.

down on the Sixth avenue road, and he was the first to see the murderer. The police arrested the parties who were with her, and placed Sciford practically in the street at the Mercer street station house.

The body of the girl was left on the floor in the living room, and there it lay for over ten hours, awaiting the arrival of the coroner.

The hands were closed. Blood was splashed and tracked all about the room, and the girl's body was found in a pool of blood.

The murderer's eyes were wild and his face was pale. He was taken to the station and placed in a cell.

It was a pitiful scene. Murphy wept and moaned beside the corpse, and drew and pulled at her hair.

"My little girl, Mamie, darling, and is this your end?" he groaned, until sympathy overcame him and he wept.

"God help me, I am her father," he said later to an Evening World reporter.

"She is my daughter, No. 1. I don't believe they were married. They lived at 123 West 12th street, and I don't know any more," and he burst out crying again.

He is a member of George Meade Post G. A. R. and fought all during the civil war. He will bury the girl.

The party who witnessed the tragedy last night were arrested in the Jefferson market police court this morning and released on $1000 bail.

Policeman Sciford was also held. He was held on the influence of liquor and showed signs of being drunk.

CASSIDY TAKES THE STAND. First Witness in His Libel Suit Against O'Donovan Rossa.

He Says Hendrickson Was Warned Not to Publish the Agitator's Denunciation.

The trial of Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa and his printer, Wilbur H. Hendrickson, for criminal libel, was continued before Judge Andrews in the Court of Oyer and Terminer this morning.

Patrick Sciford, the complaining witness in this prosecution, has been for years a hard-working newspaper man, and was for some time a casual writer for Rossa's paper, United Irishman.

He identified a copy of United Irishman, which was not to be got any further than a timid youth in a lawn-clothed overcoat and spectacles, John Hendrickson, who last June purchased the copy of United Irishman from which he extracted the article.

BIG BLAZE ON THIRD AVENUE. Two Upper Floors of an Apartment-House Completely Guttled.

An early blaze this morning in one of the five-story double apartment-houses in the "Richardson Block," on the west side of Third avenue, between One Hundred and Sixth and One Hundred and Seventh streets, caused a lively scramble among the tenants.

The fire started in the cellar of 1930 Third avenue, and was discovered about seven o'clock by some people passing in the street.

Who saw the smoke coming out of the trap door in the sidewalk.

The alarm on post was informed and at once sent out an alarm, and the tenants at once began to rush from the building.

There were six families in the house, and a good many children. Those on the lower floors made their way downstairs to the third avenue entrance, but those above had to make a break for the roof.

The fire on the roof was extinguished by the fire department, and the building was completely gutted.

The damage to the building, which is valued at $1,000, was estimated at $20,000, which is fully insured.

M'CALLA'S COURT-MARTIAL. The Enterprise's Commander on Trial for His Alleged Brutality.

Bowman H. McCalla, late commander of the United States sloop-of-war Enterprise, was placed on trial to-day before a court-martial composed of thirteen officers of the United States Navy.

The story of McCalla's alleged cruelties while commanding the Enterprise on her voyage to the Philippines, and the trial, were fully related in THE EVENING WORLD when the ship arrived in this port.

Punishments, the like of which were never heard of in the American Navy were alleged to have been inflicted on the seamen of the vessel.

The case of the vessel, which was put in strait-jackets, tried to Jacob's ladder, confined in coal bunkers and ironed and paraded before a group of Ilocos nobles.

A Court of Inquiry was ordered when the vessel arrived in port and the charges were thoroughly investigated.

On the Court's recommendation the court-martial was ordered. It is composed of Rear-Admiral David B. Harwood, Capt. Henry Erben, Capt. Richard W. Meade, Commandant at the Washington Navy Yard; Capt. Lester A. Beardslee, Commandant of the USS Albatross, and Capt. E. O. Maloney, executive officer of the Boston Navy Yard.

Bloomingdale Bros. WAS THE BUILDING FIRED?

An investigation is being made by the Fire Marshal and owners of the six-story building 90 Spring street, which has been on fire four times during the past three months, the last one being last evening.

The fire was discovered at a few minutes after 8 o'clock, by Private Watchman John Fields. The fire started in the room of Mr. Becker, a restaurant; the second floor by H. Gross, clothing; J. Borghard & Co., caps, on the first floor; and by Mr. Selig, the remaining floors.

Fields was walking through Spring street when he was startled by a puff of smoke striking the sidewalk just behind him. He looked up, saw the blaze and gave an alarm.

The fire spread rapidly, and in a few minutes it was burning through the roof and burning through to the top of the building.
