JACKSON'S LUCKY.

Only Nineteen Years for Murdering His Sweetheart, Mamie Murphy.

Her Father Denounces It as an Outrage of Justice.

Judge Martine's Seathing Remarks on the Prisoner's Character.

Charles Jackson, of Buchanan, who on the night of April 15 last, in Christie's saloon, at Sixth avenue and Ninth street, stabbed and killed Mamie Murphy, was arraigned this morning before Judge Martine for sentence upon his plea of guilty of manslaughter in the first degree.

Jackson was brought down from the Tombs handcuffed by Sheriff DeLoach. He had been informed that the efforts of the father of the girl he had slain to get his plan rejected and have him placed on trial for his life had been unsuccessful, and he looked very cheerful.

It was 11:20 o'clock when Jackson was called to the bar, and to Judge Martine's question as to whether he had anything to say, Jackson replied: "Yes, your Honor. There was never a man more innocent of intention to commit a crime than I was of the crime charged against me. That's all I've got to say."

Ex-Judge Gilderleeve, Jackson's counsel, then arose and made a plea for clemency. He presented testimonials as to Jackson's good character from his fellow-workmen, and stating his belief that the prisoner had pleaded guilty to the only crime of which he could be convicted, asked that these facts be taken into consideration and judicial clemency be extended.

Judge Martine, in addressing the prisoner, said: "Jackson, your counsel has just spoken of your good character. I have knowledge that your character is just the opposite. You are a bad man. Even now the authorities of Canada want to place you upon trial for a crime committed in their jurisdiction."

"You were an apprentice boy in Canada when you took up with a woman. You say you married her. Well, after quarreling with her time and again, you one day stabbed her while walking on the street, and fled to the United States. Fortunately for you the stab did not prove fatal. However, you eluded the officers after that crime and finally came to New York."

"Here you took up with another woman—after living with her about eight months, in a flat of Jackson's age, you stabbed her, and that stab was fatal."

"This makes two women upon whom you have used your knife."

Then, continuing, Judge Martine reviewed the killing of Mamie Murphy. He said that after Jackson's plea was accepted it had been learned that there was testimony that he had killed her. In view of the fact that it was considered doubtful that the testimony was competent, and, therefore, sentence would be passed upon the plea.

Stating that Jackson was entitled to no clemency, except for pleading guilty and saving the county the cost of trial, Judge Martine sentenced him to nineteen years in State Prison.

The prisoner, who had never even flinched during his presence at the bar, turned and walked jauntily back to the pen.

Hugh Murphy, the father of Jackson's victim, was indignant, and with tears streaming down his cheeks declared that it was an outrage and that Jackson should have been placed upon trial.

Assistant District-Attorney Parker told THE EVENING WORLD reporter that he was satisfied that he had known of Mrs. Murphy's testimony as to Jackson's threats before accepting his plea, but that he could secure a conviction on the indictment.

After a careful study of the subject, however, he had learned that the plea having been accepted, could not be taken out. He said he had then called upon ex-Judge Gilderleeve and asked him to withdraw the plea for Jackson, but that this request was refused.

VOTING IN NORTH KILKENNY.

A Heavy Poll and the Fight Appears to be a Close One.

The Old Staff of the National League to Be Shelled.

[BY CABLE TO THE PRESS NEWS ASSOCIATION.] KILKENNY, Dec. 22.—Voting began early in the Northern Division of Kilkenny county, this morning.

The indications are that a large vote will be cast. The Anti-Parnellite are confident and jubilant. They held over fifty meetings yesterday and say they are satisfied with the result.

Parnell maintains his courage and is unimpaired spirit, but his chief supporters are uneasy. Noon.—Reports from all the polling places are that the election is proceeding peaceably.

The polls opened at 8 A. M. and the voting has been brisk. The result cannot be definitely known until 1 or 2 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The official count will not be made until to-morrow. The opinion of impartial observers at this hour is that the fight is a close one.

The shots are for Parnell, who would appear to be the favorite. Vincent Scully, his candidate, is hardly heard of.

The Parnellites, headed by priests, march to the polls and cast their votes solidly for Sir John Pope Hennessy, who brings to bear an element of personal enthusiasm to the support of the cause.

The polls are surrounded by groups belonging to both factions, armed with blackthorn sticks.

The constabulary are everywhere in force, and at each place are posted between the hostile parties.

So far, although there has been plenty of shouting, jostling and hard talk, no collision has occurred.

P. M.—The election in North Kilkenny was held on the 21st day.

Parnell and Keogh are driving through the districts. They are received with cheers at the polling booths.

The McCartyites are everywhere, acting under the control of the priests, who prevent disorder.

KILKENNY WON'T SETTLE ITS (DUBLIN) CLARKE NEWS ASSOCIATION.] KILKENNY, Dec. 22.—Now that the contesting hosts have been well marshaled and all the preparations of the Government made to enable the electors of North Kilkenny to register their votes without incurring the penalty of broken heads, it is admitted on all sides that the very success of the contest has minimized its importance, since it has disclosed a violence of rancor and a division of sentiment so radical that neither side will now be willing to abide by the decision of a single constituency.

Mr. Parnell has, within the past twenty-four hours, several times declared that in case of defeat he did not intend to give up; and the victory that would now compel the return of the McCartyites to the Parnellite fold would have to be a sweeping one indeed.

BUTCHERIN'S OFFICER.

Detective John Foley's Head Split Open with a Butcher's Cleaver.

Policemen's Battle in Darkness with Mulberry Street desperadoes.

Antonio and Lorenzo Bessalano, two as ugly and forbidding-looking scoundrels, could be found in New York, and Araxas Theolano, who wait in Tombs cells the result of injuries which now pin Detective John Foley down to a bed in the surgical ward of St. Vincent's Hospital and will keep Citizen John White from his usual employment for some time.

The officers retained the scoundrels before Police Justices White and Dwyer in the Tombs Court, and remanded. This is the entrance in a drama which may prove a terrible tragedy before its conclusion.

John Foley, thirty-two years old and sturdy as an oak, has been a policeman eight years and a member of Chief Byrne's detective staff since he left the law school.

He was in citizen's dress, but every Italian in the Mulberry street neighborhood knew him, and when he pushed open the door, and stepping into the butcher shop there, shouted to the brawlers to desist, there was a howl of anger, and one of the men, a big, swarthy man of forty-five years, who was shouldering the other right and left, seized a cleaver from the hood and made straight for the officer.

Foley did not flinch, he bared his bosom, showing his shield and commanding the howling ruffian to drop the weapon.

In an instant the man had reached him, the cleaver was uplifted and it came down upon the head of the policeman. There was a crunching sound, and Foley sank to the floor.

The light made Clark a mark, and he was shot in the arm. Some one had turned out the only light in the dingy room, and Roundman and the policeman were in the dark.

The little boy had also told them that the man who had struck down Detective Foley was hidden in the saloon at No. 253. A light showed that No. 253 was empty, but the crowd in the street was so thick that the policeman and a rear attendant, Clusens gathered and Roundman White called upon them to assist.

John Clark, of 257 Elizabeth street, and White, ventured into the area, Clark carrying a lamp. The light made Clark a mark, and he was shot in the arm.

Pick pistols was the result, but Roundman White drew his pistol and fired in the direction of the man who had struck down the officer.

Fury and excitement, and then the area was cleared of any one save White and the wounded Clark.

White found the saloon at No. 253 locked and the door barricaded. He broke down the door and found a crowd of Italians huddled at the end of the saloon.

The burly man was crouching behind the bar, but dragging him out White turned him over to the police.

Just at this moment Foley, who was supposed to have been killed, recovered consciousness. He lay on the floor, his head dripping with blood, tottered into the saloon and pointed out the assailant. It was Antonio Bessalano, the proprietor of the saloon.

Foley insisted on walking to the station in Mulberry street, but collapsed when he arrived there.

SAVED BY ONE MAN'S NERVE. A Runaway "L" Train's Passengers Rescued from Deadly Peril.

Frederick Krieger, the young man who stopped a runaway train on the Sixth avenue elevated road yesterday, and rescued hundreds of passengers from peril, told his story to an Evening World reporter this morning.

While talking to the reporter, a young fellow, who works in the repair shops of the Brooklyn bridge, and when called upon by the reporter was evidently embarrassed by his sudden leap into his version of the occurrence is as follows:

"I started downtown from my home on West Ninety-ninth street about 6:20 in the morning on my way to the Bridge shops."

"When we had left the Twenty-eighth street station and had gone about two blocks there was an explosion and the noise of escaping steam, and then the train suddenly stopped."

"The cars were pretty well crowded at the time, and as soon as the cars stopped the passengers, the women especially, began to get panicky."

"I was on the forward car and went out on the platform. I could just see the engine, with a big cloud of steam blowing about it, and the engineer and fireman out on the structure, with hammers and wrenches trying to repair the broken machinery."

"I started downtown from my home on West Ninety-ninth street about 6:20 in the morning on my way to the Bridge shops."
