Rev. Thomas E. Sherman Reads the Church Service Over His Father's Body.

Windows of the house were held at six o'clock for parties. In Ninth avenue the Twenty-second and Twelfth Regiment Armories were tastefully and appropriately draped.

LAST VIEW OF THE GENERAL'S FACE. The exception of the immediate friends of the family.

The weather favored the funeral. The uncertainty of the weather at this season of the year gave rise to the fear that the day might be stormy or inclement, and thus greatly interfere with the comfort of the thousands who were expected to participate in the ceremonies.

There were thousands of visitors in town, who had come to witness the great parade, the incoming trains during the morning brought to the city nearly double their usual number of passengers from the suburban towns and villages in New Jersey, Long Island and along the Hudson River.

The flags of all the public schools will be draped with mourning for ten days, by order of the Commissioners.

Those which are open are the Registrar's and County Clerk's offices, the City Chamberlain's office, the Bureau of Arrears and the Tax Collector's office.

At the Post-Office, orders were issued that no mails are to be sent out between 2 and 5 o'clock this afternoon, and carriers will make no deliveries. All the ordinary business was suspended.

Notable funeral decorations. In Broadway the emblems of mourning were displayed very generally from all the larger buildings both above and below Canal street.

Other buildings decorated more or less conspicuously were the New York Hotel, Casino, Broadway House, Rogers, Vest & Co., Vogel Bros. and the Adams Express Company.

The funeral decorations on Fifth avenue were more numerous and elaborate than in any other street along the line of march.

boat patrol, which will act as a convoy to the ferryboat conveying the remains across the river to the Pennsylvania depot.

Touching the subject of Gen. Sherman's religious belief, his son said in a positive way that he may well remove all doubts on this point.

A touching incident occurred at the house early this morning. Two old veterans of the sixth army corps, one of them from a Massachusetts regiment and the other from a Pennsylvania company, who had arrived in town late last night came to the house about 10 o'clock.

The officer told them that it would be impossible for them to see the body, as he had strict orders to admit no one, and they appeared to be heart-broken with disappointment.

They were all accepted by the family and were taken into the front parlor, where the General's bier lay, and were heaped around the coffin and at the sides of the room until the apartment was finally filled so full that it could hold no more.

The draped caisson which was to bear the coffin containing Gen. Sherman's remains arrived at the house shortly after seven o'clock.

It was drawn by four black horses, with mourning trappings and plumes, and was furnished with a raised platform on which the caisson was to be placed.

Behind this military funeral came a handsome black carriage, also led by a number of the finest horses, with a drawing of black velvet which reached nearly to the ground.

At 12:45 the formation of the parade was begun. Just before the hour of starting, the column of the six big sergeants from the Regular Army, who had been chosen as coffin-bearers, entered the house.

Major-General Sherman, who arrived at the house at 1:30 A. M., was very much exhausted and worn out by his anxiety and the hardships of travel, and retired to his room very soon after he had received the greeting of his family.

At 12 o'clock the family assembled in the parlor around the coffin, where the ritual of the Catholic Church was performed and the service for the burial of the dead was read.

After they had waited outside for nearly an hour, the funeral march to the cemetery, which was led by the military band, was about to start.

THE GHOST SCENE FROM "HAMLET" With Local Touches.

HERE WE HAVE A P.M.L. AGAIN. Starts Anew on its Mission of Educational Campaigns.

The People's Municipal League is re-energized. It starts anew on its mission of educational campaigns with an address to the people in which stress is laid on the fact that the birth of the League last July created enthusiasm among all right-minded citizens.

It takes time to run an educational campaign, and the enthusiasm over the re-energization of the League will be more satisfactorily demonstrated by the subscriptions that come in to carry on the work of education.

The League came to life again last night at quite a large meeting held in Scottish High Hall. Among those who attended the ceremonies were Wheeler E. Peckham, Simon Stern, Howard Crosby and H. Haber Newton.
