

LEAPED FROM FLAMES

Seventeen Families Panicked Stricken at a Fire in Henry Street.

A Young Girl Jumped from the Third Floor Fire Escape.

Patrick Gillen's Brave Rescue of Baby Nathan Dietz.

Another tenement-house fire, with more than the usual accompanying horrors, threw the occupants of the Henry street into a panic...

The fire broke out at 9.45 o'clock in the rooms of Morris Dietz, a tailor, on the first floor...

Patrick H. Gillen, of 160 Henry street, was passing and noticed smoke issuing from the window of Dietz's apartments...

Gillen rushed up to Dietz's door, but it was locked. He burst it open, and grabbed the two children.

Nathan Dietz, the baby, only a year and a half old, was enveloped in flames, and by the time Gillen reached the stairway the body was almost roasted to death.

He was carried at once to the Madison street station and was transferred to the Gouverneur Hospital.

While Gillen was performing his heroic act the flames were mounting to the upper floors.

After bringing his living freight to the sidewalk he hastened to give the alarm.

Assistant Fire Chief McCabe was soon on the scene and turned in a second alarm, which was soon followed by a third.

By the time the fire was reached the third floor everyone in the house was panic-stricken and eager from the house by the street door was completely cut off by the flames.

Men, women and children had crowded together at the top of the third flight of stairs, and, seeing their hopes of getting to the street cut off, they rushed for the roof.

Rosa Gambley, thirteen years of age, lost her head and ran for the fire-escape.

The flames were bursting in sheets from the window below her.

She prepared to jump and the people, who had gathered in large numbers, held their breath.

Some one called out for her to wait, but they were too late.

She balanced a moment on the rail of the fire-escape landing and then leaped into the air.

She landed on top of a man and fell to the sidewalk, sustaining a bruise on the back. She was taken to Gouverneur hospital in an ambulance.

All the other tenants escaped through the scuttle to the roof, the flames following hard after them.

The screams of the frightened women and children, the shrieks of the firemen and the noise of the engines all tended to increase the horror of the scene.

Gillen said that when he entered Dietz's room the lounge was standing upright and was the seat of the flames.

Neither Dietz nor his wife could be found. The building is owned by Jacob Cora, of 921 Madison avenue. The building was completely gutted for the most part.

The damage to the building will reach $4,000 and the loss to the tenants $2,000.

The basement of the burned building was used as a bakery by P. Jacobs, whose store was ruined by smoke and water.

The floor above was occupied by Morris Dietz, in whose room the fire started, and Mark Cohen, who lived on the second floor.

Joseph Samuels was the only tenant on the fifth floor. Adolph Malatsky, Morris Finberg and Joseph Hirschman occupied the rooms on the top floor.

Fifty-two thousand people, who had gathered to see the fire, were held back by the reserve from the Madison Street Station. Many of the tenants stood crying over the loss of their few-epoch goods.

The loss to the tenants is estimated to be $2,000.

BY CABLE TO THE PRESS NEWS ASSOCIATION. PARIS, April 20.—The press says today that Baron FAVA, the recently recalled Italian Minister at Washington, passed through Paris yesterday on his way to Rome.

It is stated that during the passage from New York to Havre Fava declared to passengers who conversed with him that the Marquis Imperiali, now in charge of Italian affairs at Washington, would also be recalled; that Italy would have no diplomatic representative in America, and that Sir Julian Pauncefote would be requested to resign Italian interests there until a settlement of the New Orleans affair was reached.

HE WANTED TO KILL A PRIEST.

Lunatic Dunlap Captured at Father Van Rensselaer's House.

Robert Dunlap, the Wall street man, was released from the Fish-kill insane asylum yesterday.

He has been a patient at the Fish-kill asylum since February last, when he collected a crowd in Wall street by wrapping his overcoat around Washington's statue, in front of the Sub-Treasury building, and afterwards scattering five dollar-bills on the Stock Exchange floor.

Dunlap turned up at the College of St. Francis Xavier, in West 125th street, about 10 o'clock this morning, and in a mild tone of voice and quite rationally inquired for the Rev. Father Van Rensselaer.

Dunlap was shown into the parlor, and the priest was called. He is a friend of Dunlap's, and when he saw who his visitor was greeted him cordially.

Dunlap refused to shake hands, and coolly remarked: "Father I came here to kill you."

The clergyman did not betray his alarm but kept Dunlap talking until a messenger had been sent for Detective Brett, who arrived at the residence of St. Francis Xavier's about 11 o'clock this morning, and in a mild tone of voice and quite rationally inquired for the Rev. Father Van Rensselaer.

SHOT BY A TWELVE-YEAR-OLD.

Morris Schwabe in the Hospital with a Bullet in His Back.

Little Jacob Harber Held to Await the Result.

"I only tried to frighten him, sir," replied a severely haired, scar-faced lad of twelve years, as he stood in front of Justice Brooking, in the Le Avenue Police Court, Brooklyn, this forenoon, charged with shooting a playmate during a trivial quarrel last night.

Jacob Harber was the prisoner, and he lives at 28 Marcell street, where he cultivates a whole crop of cabbages and chickens, which he has trained to perform a series of astounding evolutions. It was this collection of birds that got little Jacob into his present peck of trouble.

The other lads around Marcell street grow vegetables of all kinds, and feathered poultry, and they regarded it as their duty to annoy him, in a boyish way. They pecked stones at his pigeon-coop, and they even pulled stones at him.

Some of the families went further in their mischievousness, and attempted to rob little Jacob's coop. It was partially successful, and Jacob lost a pigeon.

The grievance rankled in his breast, and boy-like he strove to get even. Unfortunately it was Morris Schwabe, a youth of the same age as Jacob, who became the latter's object for revenge.

Jake met Schwabe last night and laced him with iron clubs, and when Morris said "didn't touch nothing," but this didn't satisfy Jacob, and drawing a revolver from his clothes he banged away at Morris.

Morris turned aside a moment before Jake fired and the bullet lodged in the fleshy part of his back.

When Jake saw what had happened, he turned and fled like a gray streak. But the police caught him and locked him up in the Sixth Precinct station-house.

He was solemnly and indignantly protested again and again that he only "meant to frighten Morris," but the policeman, who had Jake in his care, reported that Morris was lying dangerously injured in St. Catherine's hospital, suffering from a bullet wound in the back.

WHO THREW THE BOMB?

Stationer Gleason Having the Explosive Thrown into His Store Analyzed.

J. J. Gleason, the stationer, at 812 Ninth avenue, is having an analysis made today of the explosive which was thrown into his store by some malicious person last night.

Mr. Gleason was standing behind his showcase, and his friend, Thomas Stiekas, a messenger in the Custom House, was sitting in front of the store, when the exploding bomb came and scattered in different directions.

Stiekas was struck by a piece and slightly injured. Mr. Gleason was so unnerved that he had to go to bed.

The other tenants in the house thought an attempt had been made to blow them up and rushed into the street.

Parts of the explosive found in Gleason's store consist of a clay-like substance, very light and porous.

Mr. Gleason asks that the stuff was part of a dynamite bomb, and that it was thrown from an elevated trap. He says he has no enemies, and is at a loss why any one should attempt to blow him into eternity.

MORAZANO IS A MURDERER.

Moro, the Victim of His Knife, Dies Early This Morning.

A Cold-Blooded Assassination in the View of Hundreds.

There is now another Italian candidate for the death chair.

Charles Moro, who was stabbed yesterday afternoon on the sidewalk in front of his home, 231 East One Hundred and Fourth street, by Ferdinand Morazano, died at 12 o'clock this morning at the Presbyterian Hospital.

It was a cold-blooded murder, perpetrated in the view of hundreds, and for once an Italian assassin was not asked to escape.

Moro, who for several months has been acting as a manual laborer around the tenement-house where he lived with his wife and four children, has borne a good reputation.

Morazano, who lived in the same room, is a new-comer in the neighborhood, and is said to be a man of dissolute habits and vicious temper.

According to the stories of the neighbors Moro and three friends were playing cards in the back yard of the house yesterday afternoon. A fusillade of tomato cans, followed by a shower of sticks and stones, from one of the neighbors, broke up the game, and Moro, who was not asked to escape, was compelled to flee.

White Moro was remonstrating, an Italian whose name was unknown to the people in the house, came rapidly downstairs, went out on the sidewalk, and, after listening a moment to the conversation, struck Moro in the face.

Moro, who was not asked to escape, was compelled to flee. He was struck on the forehead and stepped between the two men. There was a brief struggle between the three when another Italian came from the doorway of an adjoining house and listened by the open door of the first floor of Moro's brother's right hand, almost striking the latter on the forehead.

The fight then became general, and suddenly Morazano appeared upon the scene. He showed his knife through the excited crowd that surrounded the combatants, at the same time striking a wooden stick.

Moro was taken to the Presbyterian Hospital, and when Moro was brought before him he was too weak to do more than identify his assailant.
