

MOURNING FOR CLEOPATRA.

Central Park Menagerie's Queen to Be Stuffed and Exhibited.

She Was the Finest Specimen of the Female Royal Bengal Tiger in America.

Cleopatra, Queen of the Central Park Menagerie and of the hearts of all visitors to the local Zoo, has succumbed to grip and pneumonia after a painful illness of two weeks.

Cleopatra was familiarly known as "Kitty." She was the finest specimen of the female Royal Bengal Tiger in America. Her admirers were legion, and her death will be a cause of real sorrow to hosts of children and many grown people, for she was not only a magnificent and beautiful tiger, large, sinewy, agile and graceful, but a good-natured animal, playing with a ball or other toys like a little kitten, to the delight of her visiting friends.

Dr. George S. Huntington, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, after a careful autopsy, says:

"Kitty certainly died of pneumonia, and I see no reason to doubt that it was a reequence to the grip. Her lungs presented all the appearance of human lungs after a pneumonia. All of her other organs were perfectly healthy, save for a few spots of tuberculosis on her liver, so she might have lived for years had she not been attacked by the pneumonia and pneumonia. She was a well-nourished beast and well developed."

As related in THE EVENING WORLD some days ago, Dr. Conklin, Curator of the Menagerie, said that Cleopatra came down with all the symptoms of the grip in men— sneezing, coughing and enormous lassitude. It is difficult to doctor a sick tiger, for even gentle and kind Cleopatra became a dangerous beast when attacked by sickness. Cod liver oil was administered by pouring it on the patient's beautiful, velvet paws through the grating roof of her cage, the tiger, true to the instincts of the cat species, lapping the nasty, sticky, greasy stuff off her fur with her tongue and thus taking the medicine into her stomach.

Cleopatra would not eat, but when she did partake of a little fresh horse meat a powder of iodine of iodine was hidden in it.

But the poor tiger grew weaker and worse daily, and yesterday she gave up the struggle. Her breath came hard. Pneumonia was strangling her. The air vesicles in her lungs closed, for the lungs were almost solid. At 2.30 o'clock in the morning she tried to rise to her feet, slipped in her weakness, fell back and died.

Curator Conklin actually shed tears, and Hughey Downey, the keeper of the lion house and nurse to the sick tigers, mourns as if he had lost a child.

Old Tom, Cleopatra's royal mate, who has been separated from her in his illness, seemed to realize that something bad was going wrong. He ran wildly about his cage, emitting a peculiar cry, and when the limp body of his spouse was removed from the scene of death, the big tiger stood close up to the grating, sniffed the air, trembled like an aspen and snorted with fierce anger that boded evil to any living thing that might come within reach of his powerful claws, or dripping fangs.

The panthers, the leopards, the hyenas and the lions in the house partook of the excitement, and ran wildly about their cages. Jack, the big lion, roared in a way to make one's hair stand up.

Even Smiley, the old rhinoceros, and Miss Murphy and her fat baby reared erotically through the gratings at the scene.

Cleopatra was considered the finest specimen in the Central Park collection. She was imported by Hazenbeck, the Haverly animal dealer, and bought by Curator Conklin for $1,000 in 1886 to be the wife of Tom. She weighed 300 pounds when in health, but she wasted away very much in her long illness.

Her skin will be mounted for the Museum of Natural History, and Cleopatra's form will be preserved, beside that of King and other favorites of the children. Her head has been sent to the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and Dr. W. L. Bidwell, Dean of the College, will examine the brain to the interests of science.

BLOCKED TWO MAIL TRAINS.

Captain Fitzpatrick and His Schooner in Trouble.

Capt. John Fitzpatrick, of the schooner W. L. C., belonging to Melhorn Bros., of Little Falls, was a prisoner to-day before United States Commissioner Stratton in Jersey City, charged with detaining the mails.

Capt. Fitzpatrick sailed down the Hackensack River yesterday afternoon in his schooner with a cargo of bricks.

At the schooner approached a draw-bridge, the shoemaker would have handled the Captain roughly.

They threatened him, and he went into the cabin, returning with a revolver and threatening to blow the head of any one who attempted to come on board.

At the request of Capt. Hoseney, Capt. Fitzpatrick came ashore, and he went up on the bridge he was positioned upon, disarmed of his revolver and placed under arrest.

In court Capt. Fitzpatrick said he did all he could, but no one else had a helping hand. He was held for trial.

NEARLY BURNED TO DEATH.

A Baker Severely Injured in Trying to Save His Employer's Shop.

Gottlieb Corkey, a journeyman baker employed by Herman Dall, at 187 Second Avenue, was badly scorched about the neck and hands, while trying to extinguish a fire in the bakery at 3.30 o'clock this morning.

He had gone up from the basement to the sidewalk to get a sack of flour, when he heard an explosion in the bakery, and he rushed to the fire as it was about to break out.

"Pop" Ryan Buried.

George Ryan, for sixteen years the stage door-keeper at the Union Square Theatre, was buried this afternoon from his home, 104 Third Avenue, "Pop," as he was familiarly known, was about seventy years old, and would tell all the plays produced at the Union Square Theatre, and repeat the names of many of them. He died Tuesday night from pneumonia resulting from grip.

JOKES ON GENERALS.

How Grant Missed a Lincoln's Birthday Celebration.

Reads New York for Chicago in His Invitation.

Gen. Sherman Smoking a Cigar Stump in a Big Parade.

Ex-Alderman Gen. Gregory is a good fellow, that nobody will deny. He is a chuck-fart of good stories as the proverbial egg is of merit. He tells a story in a short, crisp, chipper way that adds much to its merit, but he can quit story telling with absolute abruptness when there is business to do, and that's just what he did on the occasion of a call from "The Evening World's" remembrance reporter.

George had told two little stories, and while one of them was political, the other wasn't, but deviated into the first one so naturally that it will have to go on the record.

Mr. Gregory is a host in the Seventh Assembly District Republican politics, and he is at present Second Assistant Postmaster of New York.

"It had not been for Dr. Green's Nervine I should have died long ago. I had the grip and it left me prostrated, extremely nervous, limbs stiff in the joints, towards blood and breathing terrible. In fact I was almost a complete wreck, and could do but little work of any kind. I commenced to take Dr. Green's Nervine, and at the end of one week was better, and now am able to do a full day's labor."

I commenced to take Dr. Green's Nervine, and at the end of one week was better, and now am able to do a full day's labor."

somehow, I felt that we were in some way on our defense.

"We will" ejaculated Grant, half to himself, and turning the envelope in his hand as if musing.

"This is a queer to read," he said. Then he scrutinized the envelope closely, and then laughed heartily and passed the envelope to me.

"Why, General, this letter was post-marked at Chicago," I said.

"Yes, I'm asked to attend the Lincoln Memorial at the Chicago Lincoln Club, I accept, and here I am to go to it!" chuckled the silent man from Galena.

"Well, well, I'll go and make some calls in this neighborhood that I promised to make a long time ago," said Grant good humoredly, and then he bustled into that cape coat and was off.

"Speaking of Grant reminds me of Sherman. Who can think of one without the other?" ran on the lumber tongue of the best story teller in the Fourth building.

In May, 1877, the statue of Fitz Greene Hall, the poet and man of the world, business man and political force, that stands on the Central Park Mall, was unveiled with much ceremony.

"The President was here. Hayes had only just taken his seat, and this town was very New York in its feeling, because it is a Democratic town. Tilden was a New York man, and Democrats believed that Tilden and not Hayes should have been inaugurated."

"Well, it was decided to detail a guard of honor to each carriage in the parade, and I was to be in charge of the carriage in which rode Gen. Sherman, another military man and two ladies."

"The parade passed up Fifth Avenue, and all about it I felt as if I were in the city of the German people, for the men, women and children who thronged the sidewalks. His hat was off most of the time to these admirers and friends."

"The simplicity and honesty of 'Uncle Billy' has been a byword for a generation, and presently General Sherman pulled from a pocket somewhere a disreputable looking cigar stump.

"There were about a dozen puffs left in that 'butt,' and Sherman put it between his lips and began to feel in his vest for a match which he heard one of the young ladies exclaim in a horrified tone:

"Father, you are not going to smoke that—that!"

"Course, why not? I haven't had a smoke since this morning. Lucky I saved this stump. Smoke now! Both you and I!"

"But, father, think of all these people looking at you. What will they think?"

"Oh," laughed Sherman, "they don't mind me. They all know me. There's no use of my putting on airs."

THE GRIP'S AFTER EFFECTS.

Why You Do Not Get Back Your Strength.

There is a disease which leaves in its train so many weak, nervous, debilitated and discouraged sufferers as the grip. People who have had this disease do not recover their strength readily, but day after day attend to their employment in a weakened and exhausted condition, feeling tired and languid all the time. If this nervous weakness is allowed to run, a sudden attack of prostration, heart failure or paralysis may result.

The great strengthening and invigorating medicine to take in such cases, as well as for Spring dyspepsia, and to recover their strength readily, but day after day attend to their employment in a weakened and exhausted condition, feeling tired and languid all the time. KRAUS IS OUT OF DANGER.

Fortunate Outcome of the Murderous Assault in Lyndhurst Woods.

Several Inconsistencies in His Tale of Enticement and Attack.

Heinrich Kraus, the young German who was murdered in the Lyndhurst Woods Tuesday night, is reported to be so far improved as to be able and anxious to leave Peter's St. Joseph's Hospital.

He still carries the bullet in his neck, but it apparently gives him little trouble.

No clue to his assailant's identity has been found as yet. Chief of Police Gronl, of Peter's St. Joseph's Hospital, held an interview with Kraus at the hospital this morning, but learned nothing that would aid in the discovery of the would-be murderer.

The Kraus has apparently been very willing to tell all about himself and his mysterious assailant, comparison of his stories to different persons shows several inconsistencies.

He now says that in July next he will have been in America three years. Yet he told the clerks of the Labor Bureau at the large office that he arrived in this country less than a year ago.

Kraus says today that he had no large sum of money, either with him at the time of the assault or anywhere else. That he never possessed as much as $500 at any one time in his life, he claims that he had only 25 cents when he engaged to go to work on the Jersey milk farm.

Instead of giving the stranger to understand that he had money to buy an interest in the house of Kraus's aunt to get his clothes, he says he apologized to him for not being able to return a treat in a saloon where the pair drank Kraus taking sarsaparilla and his companion took beer.

This occurred twice, according to Kraus, while the Irish were on their way up to the house of Kraus's aunt to get his clothes.

This aunt Kraus refused to locate, either by name or address, as he says, to avoid disagreeable publicity for her. It was learned, however, that she is Mrs. Leuning, of 160 Seventh street, and that it was the name of her son, George Leuning, that appeared on the copy of the German paper found near the scene of assault. It was in this paper that Kraus had wrapped his butcher knife.

George Leuning was taken to Castle Garden by Detective Groden last night, but none of the people there had ever seen him, and upon the explanation given by him and his mother he was released from custody.

Young Leuning said that Kraus had lived at their house for two weeks past. He told Leuning that he had no money, having lost all his savings in a button business at 41 Elizabeth street.

The theory of the detectives is that Kraus, through vanity, had boasted to persons he met at Castle Garden about having made large sums of money in America, and that he was overruled by parties who planned to lure him away and rob him.

It was reported last evening that the Lehig Valley Company would take a raid with 500 men on the Jersey central track near the Griffing Iron Works lot, for the men were assembled at the Lehig Valley sheds in Greenville.

The Jersey Central officials acted on the rumor and had fully 500 Italians at the Griffing Iron Works with orders to resist any attempt to remove or destroy their property.

Six Lehig Valley men kept quiet until daylight at the works, but no others from that company appeared.

DEATH, BUT NOT DISGRACE.

Suicide of Young Joseph S. Blumenthal in a New Orleans Hotel.

A Relative of the Assemblyman Dies and Leaves a Strange Message.

A despatch from New Orleans received this morning states that Joseph S. Blumenthal, a New York commercial traveler for S. Oppenheimer & Co., dealers in brokers' supplies at 96 and 98 Pearl street, committed suicide last night in a hotel in that city by taking morphine.

Blumenthal arrived in New Orleans last Thursday. It is said that he then appeared depressed in spirits. He went to his room last night and was found lying dead on his bed an hour later by a friend who called on him. There was an empty morphine vial on a table near him.

A letter written by Blumenthal was found, addressed to J. Kronthal, at New York commercial traveler who is at present in New Orleans, requesting him to notify the suicide's brother, Louis Blumenthal, of 12 Vesey street, and S. Oppenheimer & Co., his employers, of his death; also requesting that the news of the occurrence be broken as gently as possible.

On the envelope were scribbled a few lines asking that the matter be kept out of the newspapers, ending with these sentiments: "I prefer death to disgrace. My fondest love to all my dear ones."

Though nothing was found among Blumenthal's effects to indicate the motive that prompted him to take his life, it was believed that financial embarrassments had been the cause.

The new young Blumenthal's sad death created a genuine surprise among his relatives, employers and friends in this city, who regarded him as a young man with an unusually bright future.

He was only twenty-four years old, and belonged to one of the most respected families in this city. He was a nephew of Assemblyman Joseph Blumenthal and a brother-in-law of Editor Hanson of the World.

The suicide's home was with his parents, at 147 East Seventy-third street, a few doors east from Assemblyman Blumenthal's house. An EVENING WORLD reporter conveyed the intelligence of Blumenthal's death to his employers, S. Oppenheimer & Co., this morning.

The members of the firm were greatly surprised, and said they were at a loss to account for his rash act.

Said Mr. S. Oppenheimer: "We have just received a letter from the young man dated at New Orleans April 20, in which he speaks encouragingly of his trip."

Blumenthal had been in our employ about two months, and it was his first trip on the road. He had done remarkably well, and I was so pleased with his work that I wrote him a few days ago a complimentary letter.

"He was a very attractive and accomplished young man, and came to us on the recommendation of Mr. Hanson, his brother-in-law. He had travelled in the West for four or five years, and appeared to be an excellent salesman."

"What caused him to kill himself I cannot understand. He was not a drinking man, and his accounts, so far as we know, are straight."

"Besides, if there was any delinquency, it could only be trivial, and would certainly not warrant him in ending his life."

"The request made by the suicide that Joseph Blumenthal, of No. 151 East Seventy-third street, be notified of his death, as well as his brother Louis, had not been carried out this morning when an EVENING WORLD reporter called."

The house is occupied by the family of Assemblyman Blumenthal, who is in Albany, and the latter's wife had not heard of the young man's death. She was unable to assign any reason for his suicide. He was of a cheerful and sunny temperament, she said.

At 147 East Seventy-third street, where the young man's parents reside, it was said that none of the members of the family were at home.

A domestic told the reporter that the family had been notified of Blumenthal's death, but she did not know what action would be taken.

A night message was received early this morning at the office of Isaac Bovey & Co., wholesale liquor dealers, at 12 Vesey street, addressed to Louis Blumenthal, brother of the suicide, who is employed there as salesman.

Louis Blumenthal had not yet arrived. He attended the Old Grant's banquet last night, and was expected to arrive in the morning. Blumenthal was considered one of the most expert penmen in the country. He was unmarried, and his body will be brought to this city by burial.

SOUNDING WORLD PRAISES

PILING UP THE ROLL OF MERIT FOR THE PEOPLE'S PAPER.

How Galle & Co. Are Carrying Out Their Gigantic Contract of Selling So Many Faithful, Truehearted Things About Us—No Far No Truehearted Things In Much More to Come.

MOOTH AND SURE as a well-balanced machine or an awfully sailing clipper, the plan suggested by O. J. Gude & Co. and adopted by THE WORLD of using the circular I road boards for the presentation of those and happy thoughts about THE WORLD the whole run on for 1,000 hours and to cost the neat sum of $1,000, goes on without a break or hitch.

From the very start it has been a success. The art of advertising and selling phrases upon the broad white sheets and the other artists with brush and paste got the sheets right side up with care each on its appropriate board.

Yesterday's roll was from Forty-second street, on the Third Avenue line, right up to the end of that line at Harlem. This disposed of twenty-five out of the thirty in the day's quota, and the other five were put on the lower end of the Sixth Avenue line and covered the South Ferry station, the Battery place depot and the two platforms at Hector Street. There was the same close working in the form of a do-it-yourself plan, in which the artists were to place their own words and then a particularly piquant one would bring a smile, again the statistical ones brought exclamations of surprise at the magnitude of the figures, and every digit of the presentation of a Holy Trip, No. 44 was put in the form of a do-it-yourself plan, in which the artists were to place their own words and then a particularly piquant one would bring a smile, again the statistical ones brought exclamations of surprise at the magnitude of the figures, and every digit of the presentation of a Holy Trip, No. 44 was put in the form of a do-it-yourself plan, in which the artists were to place their own words and then a particularly piquant one would bring a smile, again the statistical ones brought exclamations of surprise at the magnitude of the figures, and every digit of the presentation of a Holy Trip, No. 44 was put in the form of a do-it-yourself plan, in which the artists were to place their own words and then a particularly piquant one would bring a smile, again the statistical ones brought exclamations of surprise at the magnitude of the figures, and every digit of the presentation of a Holy Trip, No. 44 was put in the form of a do-it-yourself plan, in which the artists were to place their own words and then a particularly piquant one would bring a smile, again the statistical ones brought exclamations of surprise at the magnitude of the figures, and every digit of the presentation of a Holy Trip, No. 44 was put in the form of a do-it-yourself plan, in which the artists were to place their own words and then a particularly piquant one would bring a smile, again the statistical ones brought exclamations of surprise at the magnitude of the figures, and every digit of the presentation of a Holy Trip, No. 44 was put in the form of a do-it-yourself plan, in which the artists were to
