THE CLEANER.

A curious spectacle was to be seen at noon yesterday at the corner of Wall and Broad streets. It was the busiest hour of the day, and a young couple, evidently from the country, were sitting on the steps leading to the banking offices of Drexel, Morgan & Co., eating a midday meal which lay before them on a newspaper. Brokers, bankers, clerks and messenger boys hurriedly passed them and cast wondering glances at the pair, who, however, continued their meal as calmly as if seated in their dining-room at home. When they had finished the young fellow folded the newspaper, gave his companion his arm, and both mingled with the crowd of passers-by.

Certain friends of the cleaner residing along Washington Heights are curious to know the identity of the young lady who has been seen every evening riding on the cable cars during these warm days. She is described as having an exquisite figure and a wealth of golden hair, but her features are concealed by a thick veil, which causes no end of annoyance to the curious and inquisitive.

I hear that "Dick" Morrison, formerly Public Administrator, who met with business reverses is soon to be favored with a windfall of good luck. He has succeeded in restoring the missing link to an estate valued at $250,000, and his share for services will, it is said, amount to $75,000. Morrison was a power in local politics at one time, and he has been an Excise Commissioner, counsel to the Police Board and private secretary to Mr. Grace when the latter was Mayor. He was always noted for genial manners and generous qualities.

SKETCHES BY M. QUAD.

Going Out to Scrap with Daniel.
Up at Mutt Haven the other day I met a young man who had just come off a train. He had a black eye, his nose had received an awful jam, and after a patient investigation of his right lower jaw, at his request, I did not hesitate to tell him it was fractured. When I asked the particulars of the collision and how many were killed he smiled a lop-jawed sort of a smile and said:

"There wasn't any collision as I heard of at least not on the railroad."
"Then you've had a row?"
"It was this way. Yesterday morning I was around here looking for a job when a man comes up to me and looks me all over, and then asks if I was a fighter. I says that I was nothing to brag of, though I knocked the Eric Kid out in five rounds, and fought the Buffalo Butcher to a standstill in seven."
"Was sort of a match does you want to make?" says I.
"Well, says he, 'I'm a-livin' up here a bit on a farm, and I've got a boy named Dan. He's a cheerful young man, Dan's is, but he's got a swellin' of the head about prize-fights. He thinks he's the comin' Sullyman, and the craze is runnin' swell with him."
"But what has I to do with your bloomin' son Dan?"
"I wants you to go home with me. I'll pass you off for an orphan I picked up. Then I wants you to put on the mittens with Dan and knock him all over the town and reduce the swellin' of his head."
"For how much sugar?"
"Well, if it's a success I won't mind $10 and your railroad fare and a big boiled dinner."
"Well, sir, it struck me right, and we hopped on to a train and bowled away. The old man was a chuckin' all the way home over the way I was goin' to do up his bloomin' Dan, and he gave me all the pointers he could to make the job easier. We arrives after awhile."
"And Dan was there?"
"He was, sir. He proves to be six feet high and to weigh about a ton. I suppose I looked a bit lonesome, for the old man wins me aside and says:
"Never mind the size of him. He's big, but slow and awkward, and one tap on the nose will grog him."
"And you put on the gloves?"
"That's what I did. Dinner was hardly over when Dan invited me out to the barn to scrap a bit. He had an old set of gloves and he could hardly wait to peel 'em off. The old man wins at two and then land him, and I proceeds accordingly."
"Did Dan seem at all agitated?" I asked.
"Never a bit, sir. He was as cool as the north side of an iceberg in January."
"Well, the old gent calls time on us and we stepped out. I leads with my left after claret, but doesn't get any. It swings my right for his jaw, but it wasn't there. Had I better see the doctor, sir?"
"Yes, later on. What followed?"
"Why, sir, the bloomin' innocent hearted Dan, who doesn't know a swing from an upper-cut, wades into me. He drives me all over the barn and back; he knocks me to the right and the left; he lands all over me, from the top of the head to the knees, and by and by he swings for my jaw and puts me to sleep."
"Knocked you out, eh?"
"Yes, sir; and so completely that when I wakes up I was lying half a mile away beside the highway. I looks for Dan, the tender blossom, and he was down in the hay field. I looks for the old man as played me against the field and he was sitting on the fence close by. When I wakes up he says:
"Poor man! I see that cyclone when it hits you, but I couldn't save ye. I'm a constable and down on tramps, and the best thing you can do is to make a skip."
"I kips, sir, and takes the bumpers of a freight train to bring me black eye and battered nose and broken jaw back home, and I want you to put it in the sporting columns of your paper that the undersigned, which is me, you know, has gone a wistin' of his friends and is not open to any more country engagements against unknowns until he has the gate money down in his bloomin' pocket!"

BACKER ARRESTED.
Fraud Alleged in the Broadway Broker's $4,000,000 Failure.

Judge Harden Says He Was Swindled Out of $11,700 in Bonds.

The Accused Held at the Tombs in $15,000 Bail.

Note Broker Abraham Backer, of 285 Broadway, who recently failed for $4,000,000, was arrested at noon today.

The cause of his arrest was a warrant sworn out by William D. Harden, Presiding Justice of the City Court of Savannah, Ga., who charges him with defrauding him of debenture bonds of the Central Railroad and Banking Company of Georgia.

The bonds are valued at $9,700, and other certificates alleged to have been fraudulently taken from Judge Harden are valued at $2,250.

Backer was brought to the Tombs Police Court, where Justice O'Reilly fixed bail at $15,000.

Frank Rothschild, commission merchant, of 309 Canal street, became Backer's surety for this amount, and the accused was released.

In his affidavit Judge Harden states that on March 14, 1890, he made and delivered to Backer a promissory note for $10,000, on which he received from Backer $9,485 after deducting from him an collateral stock of the Central Railroad and Banking Company of Georgia, worth $9,700, and ninety shares of the Savannah Gaslight Company, worth $2,250.

Judge Harden alleges that Backer insisted upon having this collateral, and got a power of attorney from him so that he might do as he pleased with the stock.

Judge Harden further paid Backer 10 per cent. commission on the amount of the note. The note was twice renewed, the second renewal note becoming due Aug. 12, 1891.

On July 8 Judge Harden wrote to Backer asking for the renewal of the note, and Backer then said that Harden might pay $2,000 for the renewal of the note and give a new note for $8,000, payable in ninety days, leaving with him as collateral to the new note $2,000 of the collateral he had been deposited with him, but before the negotiations outside could be consummated, Backer made a general assignment for the alleged benefit of his creditors.

Judge Harden came to New York and learned from the National Park Bank and from the Merchants' National Bank of New York that Backer had not used the debenture bonds of the Central Railroad of Georgia, nor the stock of the Savannah Gaslight Company, for the purpose of procuring the discount of the note, but that he procured the discounting and the renewal of the note by the Merchants' National Bank of New York upon a loan procured by himself for his own use.

Judge Harden further states that the renewal note of $10,000 made by him has been paid to the National Park Bank, and the Merchants' National Bank now holds the securities belonging to him, by assignment from Backer as security for a loan by the bank to him, which he is unable to pay.

In conclusion, the Judge says:

"In view of the facts permitted Backer to use these securities for his own benefit, and I charge him with grand larceny in the first degree."

WALL ST. STOCK REPORTS.
Foreign Orders Relieve the Stringency of the Market.

A Better Feeling Induced by the Magnificent Crop Outlook.

Union Pacific Closes Slightly Lower Than Yesterday.

Stock prices this morning improved 1/4 to 1 per cent., all the prominent issues participating. Later on the bears made a raid on Union Pacific and Louisville & Nashville but the general list was not much affected. A better feeling prevailed in stock circles. The magnificent crops and the certainty of an enormous export movement of cereals are at last having their legitimate effect.

The fact that Europe must have our wheat was clearly demonstrated yesterday when the foreign houses took nearly 800,000 bushels after the price had been put up nearly a cent a bushel on the Chicago bear market. Further evidence is furnished by the release of the Russian Government prohibiting exports of wheat.

According to the pamphlet report of the Chicago & Northwestern Road for the year ended May 31, 1911, the surplus for the period was $2,778,708. The bonded debt shows a net increase of $7,585,000, due to the acquisition of the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley, Wyoming Central, Junction Railway and Paint River companies as well as the making of a five-million dollar mortgage. The purpose of improving the property, additional equipment, right of way and real estate to improve the line, and for the purchase and construction of second track built in Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa.

The net gain in the Treasury, coin and bullion, has increased since July 31 $2,408,304. The bears late in the day made strenuous efforts to check the upward movement of the stock market. They concentrated their efforts upon the stocks of the Union Pacific and forced the stock down to 98 1/2, but the general list held firm and reacted only fractionally from the best figures.

There is a growing impression also that the Union Pacific will shortly receive such assistance from the banks as will enable it to put it to rest beyond the pale of a receivership. Meetings are constantly being held and a few days something definite will probably be announced that will satisfy those who have had their doubts as to the success of negotiations. Friends of credit claim that he will not show his hand until the creditors of the company are satisfied that they will share towards extricating the company out of its difficulties.

The West has been a buyer of stocks for several days, and London also shows movement to take hold now that it is certain that Europe will buy the bulk of the surplus grain of the United States during the current year.

The day's sales were 210,100 shares of listed stocks and 85,000 ounces of silver.

HER ASSAILANT CAPTURED.
Black John Amelman, the Great Neck Assaulter, in Jail.

He May Be Lynched for His Attack Upon Mrs. Nelmeyer.

(SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.)
THOMASTON, L. I., Aug. 13.—John Amelman, the burly negro who attempted to assault the wife of Constable Nelmeyer in the woods near Great Neck, is in jail here, and a guard has been stationed at the prison to prevent a lynching.

Amelman was caught in Jamaica early this morning. Part of the money he obtained from Mrs. Nelmeyer was found upon his person. Scratches upon the negro's face, neck and hands tell how resolutely Mrs. Nelmeyer battled to preserve her honor. That she managed to escape at all is a miracle, considering the size and strength of her assailant.

The prisoner refuses to talk, and so far has not confessed his guilt. His guards, however, say that he covers a corner of his cell in abject terror, and that he has begged them to protect him from mob violence.

Mrs. Nelmeyer was assaulted by Amelman last Monday afternoon. She and her husband live about two miles from Great Neck in the country house of Mrs. Whitmore, who is at present stopping at Kingsbridge.

Monday afternoon Mrs. Nelmeyer started on a visit to her mother at Bayside. Her husband, the constable, had gone to Brooklyn on business. From the Whitmore House the road to Bayside leads through a lonely strip of woods.

It was in this patch of timber that Mrs. Nelmeyer met Amelman, who was generally feared by the women of the neighborhood because of an assault on a young girl made by him years before and for which he served a term in prison.

She attempted to pass Amelman, but the negro planted himself directly in her path and drew a knife, demanding her money. Mrs. Nelmeyer threw him the silver dollar, and then he seized her about the waist and dragged her through a thicket. A young girl made a possible attempt to cut her throat if she made any noise.

They began a struggle which lasted over an hour, and in which both were exhausted. Mrs. Nelmeyer however successfully resisted the negro's efforts to overpower her. Finally she broke away from him, and throwing down her purse, ran back over the road towards the Whitmore house.

Amelman stopped to pick up the purse, and while he was thus occupied Mrs. Nelmeyer made good her escape. During their struggle the negro had threatened to kill her, saying that he would assault her again if she did not give up her money. Mrs. Nelmeyer begged him not to hurt her, and said if he would let her go she would never tell what had happened.

Mrs. Nelmeyer ran all the way to the house of Jacob Scholtenberger, where she fell into a cab and returned to her home. Her clothing was torn in shreds. When she recovered sufficiently to tell her story, Mr. Scholtenberger spread the alarm and a posse was organized to hunt down the negro.

Constable Nelmeyer followed in the hunt upon his return, and had this posse overtaken the negro he would say, it is thought, be hanged from a tree in the woods where the assault was committed.

There is a great deal of feeling here against the prisoner as he is by all accounts a man that he will be allowed to live long enough to stand trial.

Mrs. Nelmeyer identified the prisoner as her assailant to-day and he was remanded to jail by Justice Morrill, who ordered him to be taken to the Long Island City jail for safe keeping. He will be taken there this evening.

THEY BOTH HAVE LEPROSY.

Dr. Edson Was Right About His Mott Street Patients.

Dr. Edson today received a report from Charly Hospital, stating that the two Chinamen who were taken there on Monday last from Mott Street were suffering from genuine leprosy.

The lepers are Ong Mow Toy, a Chinese fan-gambler, of 57 Mott street, and Tsang Ding, who lived at 27 Mott street.

Ong Mow Toy was found at his home by Dr. Edson last Sunday. On Monday Tsang Ding was reported as a suspected leper. Dr. Blauvelt found his case similar to Toy's. It was believed at that time that neither had leprosy, but Dr. Edson decided to send them back to the Charly Hospital, where they could be kept under observation and treated.

The hospital physicians have made a careful diagnosis, and in their report to the State Board of Health, they say that the two Chinamen were taken there on Monday last from Mott Street, where they were found, so that if there are any more lepers in Mott street they will be discovered and taken away.

A HORROR AND AN INQUIRY.

The gloom of a terrible disaster rests over Brooklyn to-day, and homes that were happy yesterday are plunged in deepest mourning. In New York, too, is keenly felt a sense of the horror and grief attending the terrible disaster on the excursion barge Republic, of which the news columns tell the whole story.

The barge named, carrying several hundred excursionists, was struck by a sudden squall yesterday afternoon, just after the homeward start had been made from the picnic grounds at Cold Spring Harbor. Under the wind's pressure the upper deck came down upon a mass of people, chiefly women and children, huddling towards the centre of the boat for shelter from the rain. Out of the wreckage afterwards were gathered the dead and dying, whose names appear in the list elsewhere printed.

This is the brief story of the awful event stripped of descriptive phrases. As told more at length and in detail by the present issue accompanied by charges that the barge was utterly unfit for excursion purposes; that there was risk of life and limb for every person on board from the moment the boat started. One witness says of the posts which served as supports for the deck:

They snapped like toothpicks. They were completely rotten all the way through. I do not think the accident would have happened if the barge had not been rotten.

Members of the Excursion Committee gathered up pieces of the broken posts, which, it is said, they will use to prove the truth of such allegations as that just quoted.

It is not necessary to say here that the catastrophe and its causes must receive prompt and thorough investigation. The circumstances, including the charges as to the barge's utterly unsafe condition before the accident, call loudly enough in themselves for close official inquiry. But it is not pertinent to ask whether the numerous fleet of excursion barges which has been long in use about New York and Brooklyn contains any more craft of which such things could be charged as was alleged now in the case of the Grand Republic.

Boats which carry boilers and machinery are subject to inspection, and their outfit must be duly approved before they can carry passengers. But it is not just as important that a boat's timbers shall be able to hold together as that its boiler shall be safe? The wrecked barge of yesterday carried no boiler and was a craft only to be moved by towing. But it carried great loads of precious freight. Why is it not important that regular inspections of such boats as to their strength and fitness and safety, shall be rigidly provided for?

Some of the draperies on sleeves for dinner and reception dresses are most elegantly and picturesquely arranged. They form deep, bouillonne points, billows or shaped coronet shapes, from the top to the elbow, and from here the small cuff is wanting, on either the plain portion is heavily covered with lace embroidery or passementerie bands or points. Lace sleeves, however, on a silk tulle, do not follow this rule. They are often richly ornamented and have lace draperies falling loose to the elbow, or lace and jet, or lace and ribbon shoulder trimmings with lace frills at the wrist, headed by metal or jeweled passementerie bands or points.

Judge Harden further states that the renewal note of $10,000 made by him has been paid to the National Park Bank, and the Merchants' National Bank now holds the securities belonging to him, by assignment from Backer as security for a loan by the bank to him, which he is unable to pay.

Agent Becker, of the Gerry Society, is investigating the story of Julia Littmann, the twelve-year-old daughter of Selig Littmann, the perfumery manufacturer and wholesale dealer in barber supplies, of 331 West Forty-third street, who disappeared last Monday and Wednesday nights.

She was found by a policeman at 3 o'clock this morning, sitting in Tompkins Park with two young fellows. All three were arrested, and at the station-house the girl said she met an old man, a stranger, yesterday, who took her to the park, where she was left alone. He abused her, she said, and she ran away from him, and meeting the two young men, asked them to take her home.

"They didn't have enough money to ride, so they took her to the history to Tompkins Park, where they sat down to wait until morning to go home."
