

ACCEPTS HIS FATHER'S WILL.

Disinherited Malcolm W. Ford Will Make No Contest.

Athletic Tastes Deprive Him of Any Share of the Estate of $1,500,000.

Great surprise was expressed to-day by those who knew the late Brooklyn millionaire, Gordon L. Ford, at the announcement that in his will, filed yesterday for probate, there is absolutely no mention of or provision for Malcolm W. Ford, the testator's son.

Malcolm W. Ford. The disinherited son is widely known as the champion all-round athlete of America, and is widely known in amateur athletic circles. It is said that his father disapproved of his connection with the athletic world, and that this feeling of disapproval had been intensified by the accusations of professional sportsmen time ago brought against his son Malcolm.

Mr. Ford's estate is estimated to be worth $1,500,000, including the family residence, 100 and 102 Pineapple street, Brooklyn, which extends through an entire block to Clark street, Washington C. and Paul L. Ford, brothers of Malcolm W., are named as executors with Richmond Mayo Smith, Malcolm's sister's husband. There are no charitable bequests, the entire estate being divided between Mrs. Ford and the children, all named except Malcolm.

Summers were circulated this morning that the disinherited son would contest the will, and he was asked by an Evening World reporter if that was his intention. "It is just," was the reply. "My father had the right to leave his property as he saw fit. I shall in no event contest the will."

The will, in detail, gives the homestead on Pineapple street, together with the finest private library in America, to Washington Chauncey and Paul Leicester Ford. The rest of the estate is devised to the widow for use during her life, to be equally divided when she dies among the children, Katherine Gordon Turle, of 24 Morris place, Washington C. Ford, Paul L. Ford, of 77 Clark street, Rosalie Greenleaf Barr, of 60 Madison avenue, New York, Isabel Mayo Smith and Emily Elsworth Steel, of 165 West Fifty-eighth street, New York.

Gordon L. Ford, a lawyer, twenty years ago retired with a competence, his last business engagement being as manager of a newspaper. During ten years he devoted himself to literary pursuits, and collected a library of 50,000 volumes, which were housed in a building proportionately grand in the rear of his residence. Here he spent his time, his son Paul and Worthington being his constant companions. They have made positions in the literary world.

The father wished Malcolm to tread the same path as his brothers, and devoted his devotion to athletics. But the son had a will of his own. He loved mainly sports and pursued them in spite of his father's wish.

Madness sprang up, and at last the father that he had the heavy son, though Paul and Worthington and their mother strove mightily to influence the obstinate man to Malcolm's behalf.

WALKED OVER THE BRIDGE. A Broken Grip Delayed Trains and Inconvenienced Many People.

Thousands of people walked across the big bridge this morning, although they had no intention of giving themselves that exercise when they left home. It was a case of walk or take to the ferries apparently, for the Brooklyn entrance to the cable cars was jammed, and the only information those on the bridge cars had stopped, and that no one knew the cause or how soon they would resume their trips.

An Extra Twenty-five Cents. Mothers of the town—don't you usually count on a little check dinner on Thanksgiving? Scratched a turkey—No, no, no, this one came from an extra quarter.
