

EXTRA. 2 O'CLOCK. WHO WAS HE?

A Possible Clue to the Bomb Thrower.

His Severed Head in a Box at the Morgue.

Russell Sage Nearly Recovered from the Shock.

Condition of the Wounded Men in Hospital.

Young Norton's Body Taken to His Home for Burial.

A most important fact, which may serve as a clue to the identity of the murderous madman whose bomb-throwing exploit in the office of Russell Sage yesterday afternoon—causing the loss of two lives and the maiming of several persons—has created such a tremendous sensation throughout the country, was brought to light this morning.

RUSSELL SAGE AS HE IS KNOWN TO THE PUBLIC.

It will be remembered that in the height of yesterday's excitement, when all sorts of wild rumors and stories were flying about the accounts nearly all agreed in one point. That point was that the name of the mysterious dynamite was "Wilson."

It was learned this morning by an EVENING WORLD reporter that the card presented by the assassin to Clerk Norton at the window of the outer office two or three minutes before Mr. Sage made his appearance, bore the names "Wilson & Hedenberg," of 111 Broadway.

The man said he wanted to see Mr. Sage about the negotiation of some bonds, and declared that he came from the Rockefeller, Wilson & Hedenberg, who have an office at the address mentioned, are engaged in the promotion of business enterprises, and frequently negotiate bonds for companies that want to raise capital to start their business.

An EVENING WORLD reporter found Mr. Wilson in his office early this morning. Asked if he had any idea of the person who presented the card of his firm at Russell Sage's office yesterday noon, Mr. Wilson replied:

"I have been reading in the papers the description of the head which was found among the debris in Mr. Sage's office, and which is supposed to be that of the head who tried to blow up the building.

"I am very forcibly impressed with this description, as it agrees in many points with that of a man with whom we had some dealings a few months ago.

"He was a man about forty years of age and came from the West. I cannot give you his name or any particulars about his residence or his business, for I might be doing the person I have in mind a very great injury; but there is no denying the fact that in its main points his description agrees very accurately with that of our would-be client.

"It is about seven months since I have seen him. He had a scheme to promote and came to me. I didn't know who sent him here, but we had several visits from him. We did not think well of his proposition, so we declined to do business with him.

"He was an American, I am certain, and seemed to be well informed and well educated. At that time there was nothing in his manner or conversation which would give rise to any suspicion that he was not sane.

"His conversation was perfectly rational, but he seemed to be somewhat cranky. The points of resemblance, which struck me in reading the description of the head and features of the supposed bomb-thrower, are the following:

"The description tallies.

"The features were of a rather tall man, with a narrow complexion, and regular features. He had a reddish-brown beard and mustache, which he clipped rather close. They were very stiff and bristly.

He also wore his hair, which was dark brown in color, and thick and straight, brushed right up from his forehead in the pompadour style. His eyes were blue and large, and set in expression. There was nothing wild about them, as I remember.

"The descriptions given of the head at the Morgue give the same general features, as to hair, beard, eyes, and so forth, and although I can hardly believe it is the same person, still the correspondence of detail is so striking that I am going to the Morgue this afternoon and take a look at the head. I could tell in a moment if it was the same person.

"There has been plenty of time for him to go crazy since I saw him. We have a great many cranks come to see us, and I do not often remember them from one week to another, but somehow or other the appearance of this particular man impressed itself upon me, and I have a feeling that it may be the same person.

"During his negotiations with us he never expressed any animosity toward millionaires in general, or Russell Sage, Jay Gould or any one else in particular. He might have taken some of our cards with him, and probably was impressed by this chance.

"I am sure that he was a sane man when he expressed any animosity toward millionaires in general, or Russell Sage, Jay Gould or any one else in particular. He might have taken some of our cards with him, and probably was impressed by this chance.

are large and full, and in color are of a bluish gray. One of the most noticeable things about the features is the mouth. The lips are full and red, and the teeth white, regular and remarkable.

The trunk of the body has been blown into shreds. One arm, in the left, was blown off at the shoulder and broken at the wrist. Several fingers and the thumb of the right hand were found and are in the box at the Morgue, together with a hundred other scraps of flesh and bone from various parts of the body.

The left leg is almost intact from the hip down, but only the foot and lower portion of the right leg was found.

Parts of the man's body were blown through the floor into the old office of the Union Trust Company below, and several fragments of it were picked up there by the police in clearing away the wreckage yesterday afternoon.

It is evident that the explosion must have taken place in close proximity to the dynamite, for the body, otherwise it could not have had such frightful results.

It looks as though the hand bag which he carried, and which is said to have been filled with nitro-glycerine, or fulminating powder, exploded as he held it in his right hand.

Some think he may have simply dropped it on the floor as he fled, and there is another theory that he threw a small bottle or bomb containing the explosive at Mr. Sage, which missed him, and striking the wall, or floor, exploded.

The conclusion from this instantly caused the larger quantity, which the bomb-thrower still had in his satchel, to explode, and in this way the details of this awful crime was himself blown to fragments.

but no one could say he had ever seen it before. The torn and ragged remnants of the clothing picked up at the scene of the explosion are piled on a table in the autopsy room. Assistant Morgue-keeper Finnigan examined the blood-stained fragments this morning in the presence of an EVENING WORLD reporter.

There was a portion of a pair of trousers, striped in a bluish gray, a piece of a black cloth overcoat and pieces of a black diagonal coat and vest. A sleeve of a white cotton undershirt and two pieces of gray cotton drawers and brown overalls were found. There were, besides, shreds of a white linen shirt, a black suspender, a light-brown, left-hand kid glove; a pair of lace shoes and a piece of the rim of a black derby hat, to which was attached a wind guard.

The clothing was of a mediocre quality. In examining the piece of trousers a button was found with the name of "Brooks, Boston." This would indicate that the trousers were made in Boston by this firm. It may possibly furnish a clue towards the dynamite's identity.

The glove was numbered 7 and was stamped "K." The size of the shoes was No. 11. Assistant Morgue-keeper Finnigan said to the reporter that he would nail up the box containing the body of the dynamite. The horrible fragments would be kept at the Morgue until Monday, and if not then claimed they would be buried in Potter's Field.
