

Just Look at This. A SITUATION WANTED Can Be Advertised in THE WORLD FOR 5c. A LINE. NO EXTRA CHARGE ON SUNDAY.

THE NEW YORK WORLD

TOTAL NUMBER OF "WORLDS" PRINTED LAST WEEK, 2,223,950. SAME WEEK LAST YEAR, 1,978,530. A NET GAIN OF 245,420 Copies. Holiday Record. PRICE ONE CENT.

PRICE ONE CENT.

NEW YORK, MONDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1891.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS FOR 1892.

PRICE ONE CENT.

LAST EDITION.

WOGAN SOUGHT FIGHT

Witnesses at the Inquest Say He Assaulted Joe Selling.

Let Him Go Once and Then Tackled Him on the Street.

Dive-Keeper Tom Gould Testifies and is Admitted to Bail.

Since Joe Selling, the "cud" gambler, shot and killed John J. Wogan on Christmas morning at Tom Gould's basement dive at 137 East Twelfth street, the police and attaches of the coroner's office have been busy gathering in witnesses for the inquest.

Up to this morning they had secured the following, who were all committed to the House of Detention without bail, except Anthony.

THOMAS E. GOULD, proprietor of the dive; Howard Reynolds, cab-driver; Caldwell Miller, dive-keeper known as "Cad," one of Gould's "bouncers"; James Cook, head cashier in the dive; Joseph O'Connor, "assistant manager"; Ida Adams, a frequenter of the underground resort; Samuel Koehler, Sellings' friend who was with him at the time of the shooting; John J. Fetterlich, a rounder known as "Happy" Jack; Samuel Jenkins, who was in the dive when the tragedy occurred; and backboob on the corner across from the Gould-Wogan resort.

Anthony was served with a subpoena, and as his testimony was likely to be unimportant he was not looked up.

"Happy" Jack gave himself up, as also did Koehler. Fetterlich was apprehended in a sixth avenue saloon Saturday night.

Sellings' landlady, with whom he roomed at 137 East Twelfth street, and several other of her boarders were also present in Coroner Messinger's office on second avenue this morning to testify in behalf of Sellings.

Before commencing the Wogan inquest Coroner Messinger called the jury to inquire into the cause of death of Trackman Patrick Seefeld, who was killed by a central Hudson train at one hundred and forty-ninth street and Morris avenue on Dec. 2 last. The case was rushed through in short order and the jury decided that Seefeld met his death by the accidental derailing of his car.

When the jury returned to the court room the jury is composed as follows: Herman Marcus, diamonds, 557 Broadway; foreman; M. Heyman, furniture, 103 Third avenue; David Rosenbaum, jewelry, 1285 Broadway; Frederick Smith, cigars, Oriental Hotel; J. M. Arush, shoes, 1030 Third avenue; A. Fisher, cigars, 1318 Broadway; Jacob Shaback, hotel, Forty-second street and Broadway; L. M. Smith, paper warehouse, 1475 Broadway; F. Behner, 1014 Third avenue; L. Strassburger, gent's furnisher, 1333 Broadway; W. J. Koehler, grocer, 725 Seventh avenue; L. Sperry, clothier, 1193 Broadway.

Attorney Chas. Stecker was present to look after the interests of Sellings, who shot Wogan.

When Gould was brought down from the House of Detention with his henchmen he looked as dapper as ever, in spite of his five-foot confinement since Christmas day. Locks, bars and cells had no visible effect upon his glossy suit, bristling red mustache and right-angled diamond stud, or usual naty attire. But his temper has been sorely tried by Coroner Messinger refusing to admit him to bail.

It was a decidedly novel experience for Sellings to be in an office at the same time and to be taken to court, the officer cautiously seating himself between them.

Sellings appeared cool and self-possessed. He is a small man, but apparently a nerve one. He cast looks of quiet contempt towards Gould and his gang of henchmen, and Gould returned in kind.

The proceedings were delayed by the tardiness of Assistant District Attorney Robert Townsend, who did not arrive until after 11 o'clock.

MR. GOULD'S FEELINGS HURT SOME MORE. Gould received another set-back to his supreme contempt for the majesty of the law this morning. When he arrived at the coroner's office he was greeted into the courtroom with his high silk hat independently tilted to one side.

"Take off your hat!" thundered an attack of the court.

Gould gazed at the official with surprise for a moment, but when the official again commanded, "Take off!" he complied, although the act almost caused him to shed tears.

The District Attorney's representative not having arrived at 11:05, the inquest went on without him.

Samuel Koehler, Sellings' friend, was the first witness. He said he was a furrier by trade and roomed with Sellings at 137 East Twelfth street.

"Sellings was unable to sleep the night before Christmas," said Koehler, "and coughed all night with an attack of bronchitis, from which he has suffered for five weeks.

"About 4 o'clock Joe asked me to get up and go out for a bit of fresh air. I did so. We walked up Sixth avenue and had a few drinks of seltzer and beer and dropped into Gould's place about 6 or 7 o'clock.

"We sat down at a table and had a few glasses of beer. Ida Adams sat at the table with us.

A man with some newspapers in his pocket entered the place, and selling accidentally knocked them on the floor. Cad Millsbaugh reproached him, but on being asked to have a drink got good-a-tured.

WOGAN FOLLOWED SELLING OUT. "Wogan then came in and ordered everything by the coat collar choked him.

"Selling went up the stairs and Gould called to Wogan to let him go. Wogan then came down and went up the other stairs and, meeting selling at the top, again grabbed him.

"Selling pulled his gun and shot him. "After the shot Gould ran upstairs."

On cross-examination, Koehler reiterated that Wogan had choked selling as he was leaving the saloon.

Selling had been sick, Koehler said, and Wogan was a big, heavy and much stouter man.

During Koehler's testimony Gould chewed his mustache with much evident agitation.

At this point in the proceedings Assistant District Attorney Townsend arrived and told him case lawyer Joe Steiner to look after Gould's interests.

GOULD BRAGGED COURAGE. Just why this is necessary is considerable of a mystery to every one but Gould himself.

Mr. Koehler drew a diagram of the saloon and showed how Wogan got into the place possible for him to have seen the entire affair.

Howard Reynolds, a cab-driver, of 403 Third avenue, was the next witness. He was passing by Gould's place, he said, when he saw Wogan attacking the man who he thought was Sellings. Selling started to go when Wogan called him back.

Hot words ensued between them and the witness heard a shot, but didn't see it fired. Selling went around into Twenty-third street and Wogan walked downstairs.

Juror Sperry asked the witness many questions that tried his temper and badly rattled him.

THE HENCHMEN'S CONTRADICTIONS. When Sellings was asked to stand up Reynolds said he didn't see him Christmas morning and had never seen him before in his life.

In reply to lawyer Stecker's questioning, Reynolds admitted that he had seen Sellings Saturday morning that he had told a reporter that he didn't see the shooting or know anything about it until it was all over.

"Is that the truth?" asked Mr. Stecker. "Yes, sir," said he, "you don't know anything about it, do you?"

"No, sir," said he, "my witness Reynolds retired in great confusion.

IT IS TOM'S CASHIER BLIND AND DEAF? James Cook, Gould's "cashier," testified that he had seen the shooting and that he had seen Sellings and Gould and didn't notice any disturbance or quarrel.

Hot words ensued between them and the witness heard a shot, but didn't see it fired. Selling went around into Twenty-third street and Wogan walked downstairs.

Juror Sperry asked the witness many questions that tried his temper and badly rattled him.

THE HENCHMEN'S CONTRADICTIONS. When Sellings was asked to stand up Reynolds said he didn't see him Christmas morning and had never seen him before in his life.

In reply to lawyer Stecker's questioning, Reynolds admitted that he had seen Sellings Saturday morning that he had told a reporter that he didn't see the shooting or know anything about it until it was all over.

"Is that the truth?" asked Mr. Stecker. "Yes, sir," said he, "you don't know anything about it, do you?"

"No, sir," said he, "my witness Reynolds retired in great confusion.

IT IS TOM'S CASHIER BLIND AND DEAF? James Cook, Gould's "cashier," testified that he had seen the shooting and that he had seen Sellings and Gould and didn't notice any disturbance or quarrel.

Hot words ensued between them and the witness heard a shot, but didn't see it fired. Selling went around into Twenty-third street and Wogan walked downstairs.

Juror Sperry asked the witness many questions that tried his temper and badly rattled him.

THE HENCHMEN'S CONTRADICTIONS. When Sellings was asked to stand up Reynolds said he didn't see him Christmas morning and had never seen him before in his life.

In reply to lawyer Stecker's questioning, Reynolds admitted that he had seen Sellings Saturday morning that he had told a reporter that he didn't see the shooting or know anything about it until it was all over.

"Is that the truth?" asked Mr. Stecker. "Yes, sir," said he, "you don't know anything about it, do you?"

"No, sir," said he, "my witness Reynolds retired in great confusion.

IT IS TOM'S CASHIER BLIND AND DEAF? James Cook, Gould's "cashier," testified that he had seen the shooting and that he had seen Sellings and Gould and didn't notice any disturbance or quarrel.

Hot words ensued between them and the witness heard a shot, but didn't see it fired. Selling went around into Twenty-third street and Wogan walked downstairs.

Juror Sperry asked the witness many questions that tried his temper and badly rattled him.

THE HENCHMEN'S CONTRADICTIONS. When Sellings was asked to stand up Reynolds said he didn't see him Christmas morning and had never seen him before in his life.

In reply to lawyer Stecker's questioning, Reynolds admitted that he had seen Sellings Saturday morning that he had told a reporter that he didn't see the shooting or know anything about it until it was all over.

"Is that the truth?" asked Mr. Stecker. "Yes, sir," said he, "you don't know anything about it, do you?"

"No, sir," said he, "my witness Reynolds retired in great confusion.

IT IS TOM'S CASHIER BLIND AND DEAF? James Cook, Gould's "cashier," testified that he had seen the shooting and that he had seen Sellings and Gould and didn't notice any disturbance or quarrel.

Hot words ensued between them and the witness heard a shot, but didn't see it fired. Selling went around into Twenty-third street and Wogan walked downstairs.

Juror Sperry asked the witness many questions that tried his temper and badly rattled him.

and, but saw nothing of the affair, as he was in the toilet-room at the time.

He admitted that he had reproved selling for throwing another man's papers on the floor, that Sellings had apologized and all was forgiven.

"Cad" didn't know how many "managers" the place had, and averred that the word "bouncer" was the creation of a reporter's brain.

MRS. ADA ADAMS A GOOD WITNESS FOR SELLING. Mrs. Ida Adams, of 227 West Fourth street, said she was with Sellings' dive to Gould's with Sellings, Koehler and a lady whom she did not know.

"I don't dispute over the unknown man's papers she said," said "Cad" Millsbaugh told Wogan, whom she knew as the "bouncer."

Wogan came from the street, grabbed him by the throat, dragged him across the saloon and midway up the stairs, striking and pushing him until he cried out repeatedly: "John, don't do that!"

"John, don't do that!" said that Gould and Millsbaugh both saw Wogan's assault on selling, and that Gould cried out: "John, don't do that. Let him alone!"

The former then asked that Mr. Gould be paroled in his custody or released on bail so that he could attend Wogan's funeral at 4 and 1/2 West Fourth street, at 10 o'clock.

The District Attorney was agreeable, and all Gould's henchmen were admitted to bail in the amount of $100 each.

All Adams, the well-known sporting man signed Gould's bond, and for the first time since Christmas Gould breathed like a free man. He entered a carriage and was hurriedly driven to his home.

Samuel Koehler, Sellings' friend, was released on his own recognizance, promising to forego his intention of accompanying the couple of getting married until after Sellings' trial.

The funeral of the murdered man took place this afternoon from the residence of his mother, 485 Henry street, Brooklyn. There were 200 persons in attendance, and only the relatives and a few friends followed the body to the grave.

One of the shots entered one of his eyeballs, inflicting a very serious wound. In fact, it is reported that the sight of the eye was destroyed, and that the physicians attending the Prince decided that it would be the safer plan to remove the injured eyeball altogether, to preserve the sight of the other eye.

This, it is said, was done, and yesterday Prince Christian was progressing favorably towards recovery. The other wounds in his face do not amount to anything.

DEATH OF SIR WILLIAM WHITE, BRITISH MINISTER TO TURKEY. (BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.) BERLIN, Dec. 28.—The Right Hon. Sir William Arthur White, the British Ambassador to Turkey, died from influenza at the Kaiserhof in this city to-day.

White was a son of the late Arthur White, esq. He was born in 1824, and in 1867 he married Katherine, daughter of the late Lewis Kendal, esq.

He entered the Diplomatic service in 1857, his first appointment being as clerk to the British Consulate general at Warsaw.

Sir William left Constantinople a few days ago, and while journeying homeward passed through Sofia. He remained in the capital city of Bulgaria for a short time, and had a brief interview with M. Stanbuloff, the Bulgarian Prime Minister, in regard to the attitude of Bulgaria towards France.

It was reported at that time that Sir William set forth at length the views of Lord Salisbury, the British Foreign Secretary, through Sofia. He remained in the capital city of Bulgaria for a short time, and had a brief interview with M. Stanbuloff, the Bulgarian Prime Minister, in regard to the attitude of Bulgaria towards France.

He became rapidly worse, and though the best medical aid was summoned to assist him, he lost strength rapidly and to-day the end came.

THE COURTROOM WAS PACKED with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

FOREIGN NEWS OF THE DAY.

Prince Christian Loses an Eye While on a Holiday Hunt.

Death at Berlin of the British Minister to Turkey.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS. LONDON, Dec. 28.—The Queen is spending the Christmas holidays at Osborne House, her residence on the Isle of Wight, and among the royal company is Prince Christian, Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg, who is the husband of Princess Helena Augusta Victoria, third daughter of the Queen; the Duke of Connaught, Her Majesty's third son; Prince Henry of Battenberg, who married Princess Beatrice, the Queen's young-st daughter, and Prince Albert of Schleswig-Holstein.

Yesterday before Christmas these four Princes, attended by the usual henchmen, started out to shoot over the preserves belonging to the royal estate. Late in the afternoon, when the sport was nearly finished, some birds were flushed which rose between the Duke of Connaught and Prince Christian.

The former fired into the covey and three of the leaden pellets struck Prince Christian in the face.

One of the shots entered one of his eyeballs, inflicting a very serious wound. In fact, it is reported that the sight of the eye was destroyed, and that the physicians attending the Prince decided that it would be the safer plan to remove the injured eyeball altogether, to preserve the sight of the other eye.

This, it is said, was done, and yesterday Prince Christian was progressing favorably towards recovery. The other wounds in his face do not amount to anything.

DEATH OF SIR WILLIAM WHITE, BRITISH MINISTER TO TURKEY. (BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.) BERLIN, Dec. 28.—The Right Hon. Sir William Arthur White, the British Ambassador to Turkey, died from influenza at the Kaiserhof in this city to-day.

White was a son of the late Arthur White, esq. He was born in 1824, and in 1867 he married Katherine, daughter of the late Lewis Kendal, esq.

He entered the Diplomatic service in 1857, his first appointment being as clerk to the British Consulate general at Warsaw.

Sir William left Constantinople a few days ago, and while journeying homeward passed through Sofia. He remained in the capital city of Bulgaria for a short time, and had a brief interview with M. Stanbuloff, the Bulgarian Prime Minister, in regard to the attitude of Bulgaria towards France.

It was reported at that time that Sir William set forth at length the views of Lord Salisbury, the British Foreign Secretary, through Sofia. He remained in the capital city of Bulgaria for a short time, and had a brief interview with M. Stanbuloff, the Bulgarian Prime Minister, in regard to the attitude of Bulgaria towards France.

He became rapidly worse, and though the best medical aid was summoned to assist him, he lost strength rapidly and to-day the end came.

THE COURTROOM WAS PACKED with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.

The courtroom was packed with curious citizens when the trial began, and in the place, lock the doors and keep them locked till after this trial, and promised the stern recorder that that order should be obeyed. Further, Col. Fellows told the court that Billy was trying to sell the place—that he says he doesn't own it.