IRIED SUICIDE SEVEN TIMES. THE DOBBS GANG IN CUSTODY. POLICEMEN ON THE RACK.

Mrs. Barlow's Mother Doesn't Think She Tried Again.

Believes She Has Bought Refuge Among Friends.

Dr. John W. Barlow, of 178 Rutledge street, Williamsburg, told an "Evening World" reporter today that he was ill in ignorance as to his wife's whereabouts, although he believes his mother-law could give information if she wanted to.

Mrs. Barlow, forty-four years of age, was married to Dr. Barlow in 1875. The couple have four children, and to a year ago all was peaceful in her home.

Dr. Barlow had gone to New York on a charge that he had threatened his wife with a loaded revolver. Brown was held for bonds, and shortly afterwards Mrs. Brown was committed to the Flatbush Reformatory.

A few weeks ago she returned home, it is on Thursday last week, she disappeared. On that morning she went to Alderman Beard's drug store, on Avenue A, a few doors from her home, and secured a quantity of quinine, and went out after saying she was going to her mother's.

"I have sent there twice," explained the doctor, "but they deny that my wife there. Still, there are many things which make me believe that she went by her mother's."

Dr. Barlow, dated his charge, and added grimly that when his law-attorney through writing him, he would possibly say something that would give considerable excitement.

Mrs. Dr. Barlow, who is seen by an "Evening World" reporter, said that she entered the statements made in an interview published in this morning's World to the effect that Dr. Barlow had murdered his wife, which she removed, and that he had neglected and abused her. She said that she had never seen any private asylum at Woodhaven, L. I., where her husband had been confined, and that she had never seen any of the papers which she had been sent to an asylum.

"I do not believe that she committed suicide," she said, "but I believe that she had been driven to it by the pressure of her friends somewhere in the city."

LONG ISLAND CITY, L. I., March 20. The whole gang of post-office robbers, who for several months have been looting post-offices on Long Island and in Westchester County, are now in custody.

The gang of Joseph Dobbs, aged twenty-two; Barney Dougherty, aged twenty-two; and Ella Dee, aged twenty-four, were arraigned this morning before Justice Kavanagh in this city.

The gang's headquarters was in the house at 125 Hill street, Ella Dee, the woman in the alleged mistress of Dobbs, who is said to be the leader of the gang. She is alleged to have had two children by Dobbs and knew of all the plans made for the thieving expeditions by the gang.

Hogan and Dolly Lyons, also members of the gang, who were arrested some days ago, are now in jail awaiting trial before the United States Commissioner.

Dougherty and the Doe woman made confession before the Commissioner, and said that Dobbs was the leader of the gang and always planned the robberies.

Dougherty says that Dobbs engineered the robberies of the post-office at Central Park, at Sea Park and other places on the Long Island Railroad, at a diamond pin and some money.

They also robbed the general store of the Long Island City, at Byrnes, where they stole a quantity of goods, including three dozen silver knives.

Lyons was shot through the head by the postmaster, when Lyons got to New York his wound was dressed at a hospital.

According to the statement of Dougherty, Hogan and Lyons committed the robbery in the post-office at Larchmont.

The Doe woman said she had been employed as a domestic in a Brooklyn family, and that for a time she kept house for Dobbs and his companions in Westchester County.

Justice Kavanagh held each of the women in $1,000 bail, and the Doe woman in $1,000 bail for examination next Monday.

SUICIDE OF CHARLES SCHULTZ. Indiscipline that He Shot Himself, Either for Grief or Love.

Coroner Kene will this afternoon hold an inquest upon the body of Charles Schultz, who committed suicide by shooting himself in the chest yesterday.

Schultz killed himself on Ocean avenue about 2:30 P. M. His name was discovered on a bank book of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, No. 25, 25th, and on a letter from the Brooklyn Savings Bank.

The man was apparently a contractor or builder, and there were evidences that he was engaged in some work. He was about twenty-eight years of age, of medium height, and weighed about 150 pounds.

There were several unexplained things in his pocket, all written in a delicate feminine hand, and one of these, which was undated, the writer would kill herself under the same circumstances.

In the pocketbook were written these lines: "I love you, my baby girl, with every heart and soul I have."

"I love you, my baby girl, with every heart and soul I have. I love you, my baby girl, with every heart and soul I have."

"I love you, my baby girl, with every heart and soul I have. I love you, my baby girl, with every heart and soul I have."

HARRIS TO DIE MAY 8. Continued from First Page. affidavit in which she swore that Helen was a morphine taker, and had once almost killed her father by a dose of the drug.

During Harris' address Mr. Weisman arose and left the room, and Harris failed to exclaim bitterly: "It was too bad he didn't go out of the case before, your Honor."

Recorder Smith speaks kindly. Once or twice the Recorder corrected Harris in matters of legal fact, and an impatient discussion of the facts of the case.

Recorder Smith spoke to correct your misapprehension. I am willing to hear all you have to say. I have no desire to apply to you, a layman, the rules which I should enforce against a lawyer.

Go on, Mr. Harris, I shall listen to the end. Harris then the affidavit of Juror Mason, saying that he had the affidavit of Dr. Hugh S. Kinmouth, the Asbury Park doctor, who says he sold morphine pills to Helen P. in 1888, been put in evidence on the trial.

Harris, he should have stood out for an acquittal, because he had known Kinmouth for eight years, and knew him to be an honest, trustworthy man.

Of the remark in Judge Gray's court of appeals decision, that it was established by the evidence that Harris sent the drug store to see if the quinine prescription had been properly filled, Harris said:

"The doctor who told me to do so, another that I sat at the bedside of Helen till death ended it."

"May I never know through all eternity a moment's peace, may my mother's prayers for me echo through all eternity and avail me not, if I ever left the bedside of my dying wife for any purpose whatsoever."

It is declared that all the affidavits submitted by the District Attorney to contradict those offered by Mr. Howe were either perjured or prepared.

As for Repealer Charles King, who made affidavit that every druggist in Asbury Park and every druggist had told him that he had never sold morphine to Helen Potts, Harris declared that King was a shattered libertine, who had again and again begged a dime from him wherewith to buy a brick of liquor.

Impached the Recorder's Charge. "Did Your Honor recall—did you see as I saw, the faces of jurors grow ashen pale as they listened to your charge and realized that the honored judge to whom they looked as one of superior wisdom was suggesting to them that they ought to convict?" asked Harris.

The Recorder listened without the change of a muscle in his stern face, only it became paler, if that were possible.

Continuing his address, Harris turned and extending an envelope towards William F. Howe, he whispered:

"Mr. Howe, take this. You have labored conscientiously for me, because you believed me. Take this. It is all I have to give. It is the last gift this Helen, my wife, gave to me before she died."

The old lawyer bent his head over his own trembling hand. He did not take the envelope, Harris shoved this dying man's counsel fee under the lawyer's hand. The hand twitched a little and the fingers tumbled with the envelope.

It contained a pair of linked sleeve-buttons of gold. Harris' voice choked. Tears welled to his eyes, ran up upon his pale cheeks, and into his Vanduyke beard. He concluded at 11:25, his last words being quite inaudible at a distance of ten feet.

Fixing the Day of Execution. The Recorder, in pronouncing sentence upon Harris, said that the verdict of the trial jury and the correctness of the decisions of the trial judge had been given by the full bench of the court.

The seven judges of the highest court in the State had said that the verdict was just and that the Recorder had made no error in his rulings in the case.

"There was a motion for a new trial," he said, "supported and approved by many of the best lawyers in the world, the last gift that Helen made to me, I was completely taken by surprise."

No Mass-Meeting Will Be Held. Mr. Howe said that in accordance with the special request of Harris no mass-meeting would be held in his behalf, and I don't know but he is right about it. He only wants me to present the facts in his case to the Governor, and his wishes will be respected," added the lawyer.

"One of the most impressive points in Harris' speech," he continued, "was when, after reading the affidavit of Juror Mason, he turned and, handing it to me, requested that I should keep it until he was dead and buried, and that I should give it to his widow."

"Harris will probably not be taken up to sing today on Wednesday of next week. His lawyers believe that the demonstration made to-day indicates a general public sentiment in favor of his pardon."

Baron Von Hoess Buried. Baron von Hoess, aged last Friday of pneumonia at the Hotel Normandie, was buried this forenoon in Woodlawn cemetery. The services were conducted at the church of the Heavenly Host, Fifth avenue and Forty-fifth street, by the pastor, Rev. Dr. J. H. McLean.

The funeral of the late Benjamin H. Field, the philanthropist, who died at his home, 21 Madison square, was held this morning at Grace church, Broadway, assisted by Rev. Dr. J. H. McLean. The burial was attended by representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, the New York Historical Society, the New York Yacht Club, and other organizations which with Mr. Field was connected.

Fortune-Teller Held in $500. Fortune-teller Emma Lee was held in $500 bail for examination by Justice Voorhis in Jefferson market court this morning. The lady says she has a power to tell the future, and she has a list of names of people who will die within a year.

Stabbed His Countryman in the Leg. Mike Gilto, Tom, Carmato and Peter Brody, Italians, living at 21 New street, Brooklyn, got into a fight early this morning, and Gilto stabbed Brody in the leg with a knife. Brody was taken to the hospital, and Gilto was released.

Weather Forecast. Local Forecast: For this city, light rain falling at 8 P. M. Tuesday; fine weather, falling at 10 P. M. Wednesday; light rain, falling at 10 P. M. Thursday; light rain, falling at 10 P. M. Friday.

The following record shows the changes in the temperature during the morning, as indicated by Perry's thermometer: 3 A. M., 51.6; 6 A. M., 51.7; 7 A. M., 51.8; 8 A. M., 51.9; 9 A. M., 52.0; 10 A. M., 52.1; 11 A. M., 52.2; 12 M., 52.3.

pushing towards Centre street, and heard the yelling and shouting at the other side of the Court-House.

Then all started in the same direction, pushing and pushing each other in the street, to catch a glimpse of the condemned man as he passed. It was estimated that he was going to walk to the Tombs.

The two surging masses of human beings met at the corner in front of the engine house. There were fully 5,000 people altogether, and they were packed in so closely that Adams threatened that his prisoner, that movement in any direction was for a moment impossible.

Only those who were in the centre of the throng could see anything of Harris, and as they pressed around him several tried to shake hands with him.

John W. Hays, old boy, yelled a man in the crowd: "You beat the Recorder yet?"

Harris Sealed at the Crowd. Others were shouting words of encouragement to the prisoner at the same time, and there was a perfect babel of voices. Harris was very pale, but otherwise showed no signs of nerve. There was a smile on his face, as he looked at the struggling mass about him.

He seemed to enjoy the sensation which his appearance in the street was creating. There was very little in a low tone to Deputy Sheriff Burke. Five or six policemen had edged their way into the crowd by this time and had cleared a space about the little group, and a start was made up Centre street.

A start was made up Centre street, and a start was made up Centre street, and a start was made up Centre street.

At times the crowd was so great that the officers had to stop, or could only make their way along the sidewalk with the greatest difficulty, despite the efforts of the policemen who accompanied them to clear the street above.

Even after he had disappeared within the crowd, Harris was seen in a large portion of the crowd, being about the entrance and gazed curiously at the gray walls and dark door of the building.

It is safe to say that everybody in the throng which faced up Centre street got at least one good look at the condemned man as he passed.

Harris wore a shabby-looking black derby hat and a light, black overcoat, the collar of which was turned up and buttoned tightly about his throat.

The Deamed Man's Mother. His mother had come down to Dove C. Hummel's office early in the morning, and had been her intention to go to court, and remain with her son throughout the ordeal, but she broke down completely after her arrival and the lawyers put her in a cab and sent her over to Brooklyn with a friend who had accompanied her.

During the exciting scenes in court she was across the river with some friends, who were doing what they could to comfort and encourage her.

Mr. Howe was seen at his office after the dramatic scene in the court-room. He was visibly affected, and declared that he had never in all his experience in the criminal courts heard an appeal that for convincing logic and moving pathos came up to the speech which Harris delivered on the 17th.

"He said," he said, "and it held everybody in that packed court-room spellbound from beginning to end."

"When he came to the close and, turning around to me, and he wished to give me as a parting tribute something which he valued above everything else in the world, the last gift that Helen had made to me, I was completely taken by surprise."

Al Adams the Defendant, in a Friendly Suit.

The Pool-Room Keepers After a Court of Appeals Decision.

The plan decided upon by the pool-room keepers to get a decision on the question of their right to conduct business under the present laws has been put in operation.

Peter De Lacey, for that purpose, maintained that to conduct a pool-room is to violate the law, and has brought suit in the Superior Court to enjoin Al Adams, who has been in business at 43 West Twenty-ninth street, from August, 1892, from operating a pool-room there.

In the papers filed De Lacey says that Adams threatened to continue his business until the expiration of his lease.

Adams, in his answer, says that he has been in business for many years, and that he is conducting a legitimate business, simply executing bets and wagers on horse races for commissions.

Justice McAvan today granted the injunction against Adams.

How the pool-keepers are credited with originating the plan, appear for De Lacey, and Joel M. Mark for Adams. Judge McAvan, in his opinion, says that Adams justifies under the law bill, but De Lacey claims that the law bill is unconstitutional, because it offends the Section 19 of Article I of the Constitution, which forbids any sale of lottery tickets allowed within the State.

Upon the consideration of the question requires a determination of the legislative process of the State, and whether the law, which imposes penalties imposed by the Penal Code, the possible restoration of the common law rule and many other details, and incidental matters of great public concern, which should be determined only by the Legislature, and not by the courts, and that such questions can be decided only by the Legislature, and not by the courts.

Branch of the Court. Upon the validity and effect of the law bill, the Judge grants the injunction on the plaintiff's application to file a bond and assign any appeal taken at the April term.

Winn generally conceded that the pool-room keepers are not entitled to a writ of mandamus, but he has been recently denying interference, by a similar judgment, friendly suit.

HUNGARY'S ANNIVERSARY. Mass-Meeting Adopts Resolutions in Favor of Independence.

BUDAPEST, March 20.—A mass-meeting attended by 2,000 persons was held yesterday to celebrate the anniversary of the Hungarian quarrel, which was the beginning of the Hungarian independence.

A number of members of the Hungarian Diet were present and addressed the meeting. Resolutions were adopted in favor of Hungarian independence, and declaring that Hungary should have a separate army and a separate tariff.

The resolutions demanded universal suffrage and official recognition of the independence of the country by Louis Kosuth, who is now in exile, and other Hungarian patriots.
