

WAS A MIGHTY FIRE.

The Flames Did Enormous Damage on the West Side.

Properly Worth Millions Destroyed—Families Made Homeless.

Looking for Missing Men This Morning.

A crowd of at least fifteen thousand people was congregated this morning around the block bounded by Forty-first and Forty-second streets and Tenth and Eleventh avenues, gazing wonderingly at the blackened ruins of one of the largest, most destructive and costliest fires that New York has suffered in over a decade.

Buildings, some of them of recent construction, covering a total area of over 55,000 square feet, were totally destroyed. Fifty families were rendered homeless and many of them destitute, and over 1000 hands were thrown out of employment at just at the beginning of the most trying season of the year by the conflagration.

A conservative estimate places the loss at $2,000,000, over one-half of which is sustained by William Campbell, the millionaire wall-paper manufacturer, and Haviland & Nevin, who were in the same business.

Five firemen were injured, several seriously, but so far as can be ascertained there was no loss of life.

The injured are: Robert Wallace, thirty-five years old, of 57 West Seventh street, attached to Engine Company 26, hip broken and badly lacerated. Benjamin E. Hadda, twenty-nine years old, of 312 West Thirty-seventh street, attached to Engine Company 26, has his knee dislocated, head and arms cut and body bruised. Fire Captain Gaffney, engine 26, body bruised. Edward Long, engine 26, jaw bone crushed and hand cut out. All the injured men were attached to Engine Company 26. They were hurt by the falling in of a coal shed on which they were standing, playing on the fire in the rear of 504 West Forty-first street shortly after midnight. Three men, whose names are given as John Brill, John Vanbrick and Hugh and Sieger, were said to be in the building when the fire broke out. They could not be found up to 9 o'clock this morning, and the rumor gained currency that they had been buried to death, but police investigation failed to add confirmation to the report. The police do not believe the men were in the building, but are making a thorough investigation notwithstanding.

The fire broke out in the engine-room of Campbell's manufactory in the rear of 50 West Forty-second street and near West Forty-first street, at 8 1/2 o'clock. It was discovered by Policeman Kern, of the West Thirty-seventh street station, who saw a spark issue from the windows of the building 503 West Forty-first street. He tried the doors, found them locked, and then turned in an alarm. Before he reached the building, the fire had spread to the engine room, and the flames were rolling up to the scene of the manufactory, which extends from 510 to 520 West Forty-second street back and through to Forty-first street from 503 along for nearly half the block.

The buildings and machinery had just been repaired at an expense of $50,000, and the stock and storage rooms were full of manufactured paper and materials. They ignited almost with the rapidity of a powder train and all the immense series of buildings were on complete masses of multi-colored flames less than thirty minutes.

Five alarms were turned in, but before all of the twenty companies of firemen summoned had arrived at the scene, the paper factory plant was nearly destroyed, and other buildings were ablaze and sending out threatening tongues of flame towards contiguous blocks.

The next building to shoot out flames of fire was the factory of Haviland & Nevin, at the corner of Tenth and Forty-second street. This was also stocked with paper, chemicals and other inflammable materials, and it burned with lightning-like rapidity.

In less than an hour both factories were totally destroyed, representing an investment of over $1,000,000. It was a veritable carnival of flames, with an attempt at architectural display, succeeding in extent and rivalling in beauty any grandeur ever produced by superficial products.

The army of firemen seemed powerless to arrest the progress of the flames, while the two wall-paper manufactories were burning, notwithstanding that a water tower and twenty engines were pouring torrents of water upon them. Two tenements in Forty-first street, one on either side of Campbell's factory, fell prey to the consuming monster almost simultaneously.

One way out of the three stories high, and was occupied by six families. That was on the east side and was a roaring mass of flames almost before the tenants could get out into the street with their clothing and a few personal effects.

The furniture, excepting a few chairs and bedsteads, was all consumed, and the total loss to the owners, none of whom had any insurance.

The other, No. 521, was also of brick and three stories high. The basement was occupied as a saloon by Jacob Johannes, and the remainder of the building was tenements.

Both these houses were owned by Mr. Campbell, and the tenants were told to get out. The latter, however, refused to do so, and the firemen were obliged to use force to get them out. The firemen were unable to stay the progress of the flames, which had reached the street front by 10 o'clock, and communicated with the piano furniture factory of Joseph Cabus.

The six-story brick building occupied as a machine shop, and extending from 514 to the east side of the street, caught fire while the furniture factory was being consumed.

The heat was so intense at this point that the firemen were driven back, and their efforts to save the building were ineffectual.

This building was also gutted and thousands of dollars worth of valuable machinery and manufactured material were destroyed.

The one-story brick stable of John Shay, on the east side of the street, was consumed almost before it was discovered to be on fire.

Over on Forty-second street the furniture factory was steadily marching towards Eleventh avenue. Two row tenements, Nos. 518 and 519, on the corner of Tenth and Forty-second streets, were also destroyed, and other buildings were ablaze and sending out threatening tongues of flame towards contiguous blocks.

Across on the north side of the street the intense heat of the work and cracked window panes in the stores and houses from No. 519 to No. 523, doing about $100,000 worth of damage.

In the rear of 504 and 506 West Forty-first street were a row of coal-sheds, owned by Henry Muller, who had a small stock on hand. The sheds were destroyed with some wagons and other things stored there.

James Sexton, who was employed as a watchman in Campbell's factory, was rescued from the manufactory of the building, No. 503, in a semi-conscious condition by Officer Kean. He was

A COMPLICATED ROBBERY CASE.
The Burglars Who Looted Hartman's Store Not Yet Arrested.

Nobody has been arrested as yet for the robbing of Maurice Hartman's jewelry store, at 161 Second avenue, Police Capt. Dickett, of the East Eighty-eighth street police station, and Detectives Farley and Brunner are still engaged upon the case, however, and the former says he expects to soon have the guilty parties in custody. The police admit that it is a very complicated case.

Hartman says that the diamonds lost with him by Wolfgang Lang, of 30 East Eighty-third street, to sell, and which were among the goods stolen, were not worth $1,200, as has been claimed, or anywhere near that sum.

Benjamin Eichberg, of the jewelry firm of Eichberg, Brothers, 39 Madison lane, who was shown Lang's missing diamonds by Hartman, says that he would not have paid $100 for the lot. Eichberg holds a chattel mortgage on Hartman's stock, and told "The Evening World" reporter that he proposed to take steps to have vacated the attachment afterwards secured by Lang.

overcome by heat and smoke, and fell down near the window. The officer dragged the man down the stairs and out into the street, where the fall soon revived him.

It was Sexton who said that the three men named above were in the building. Officers found three men break through a gate leading from an alley between the buildings into the street, and he surmises they must be the persons who were reported to have been burned in the building.
