

SEABROOKE'S NEW OPERA.

The Story of "Tabasco" Is Along the Usual Comio Lines.

John Drew Will Have Big Farewell Night at Palmer's.

The scene of "Tabasco," Thomas Q. Seabrooke's new comic opera, which comes to the Broadway May 11 for four weeks, is laid in Morocco. The Pasha has a longing for highly seasoned food, and his cook does his best to please him. He has indifferent luck, however, until by accident he runs across a strolling peddler, from whom he purchased a bottle of tabasco sauce, with which he tickles his master's palate at the next meal. The charmed morsel walks in with this spicy condiment that he insists upon having it on all occasions, and the small supply which the cook had on hand soon runs out, to the latter's dismay. The displeasure of the Pasha is at once aroused, and he finally gives orders that by 11 o'clock on a certain night he must have a new supply, or else his chef shall pay the penalty of death. Wholly unable to gratify his monarch's wish, the chef makes his escape, accompanied by Capt. Marco, a Spanish cavalry, and he sweethearts of both. In their wanderings they accidentally run across the same peddler from whom the first supply of tabasco had been received, and they at once make a bargain with him to deliver at the palace their night's stock sharp a vast supply of the coveted sauce. They then return to the palace, and as the hour approaches are trembling with fear lest the peddler shall fail them. This, however, he does not do, but at the exact moment he walks in with a huge bottle of tabasco, over which the Pasha goes into ecstasies, and all ends happily.

Charles Frohman has been obliged to again postpone his start for Europe. He was to sail on the 10th, but the continued great success of "Sowing the Wind" at the Empire Theatre made it impossible for him to put on the new play, "Gudgeons," before the 14th. He will see "Gudgeons" safely launched, and will sail for London May 16, arriving there for the close of its theatrical season. This has been a year of many triumphs for Mr. Frohman. Never before in this country's theatrical history has one manager been able to have four different plays enjoy long runs all at the same time in the metropolis. These were John Drew, at Palmer's; "The Girl in the Wind," at the Standard; "The Girl I Left Behind Me," at the Academy; and "Sowing the Wind," at the Empire.

Dixey is back in town for final rehearsals before appearing Monday at the Palace. The statueque gentleman with the marble abdomen, who was never born, but was quarried, "He is the great form," remarked a racing friend; "sound in wind, light in limb, perfectly trained, and a sure winner." He is as bold, graceful and alert as when Adonis began his great run of 600 nights on Broadway. He says it is a record of some kind of a record for him to be again under the direction for him to play in the management. Irene Vera, a very Russian, was engaged yesterday as the shapely "Palace."

"The Butterflies" will have a big farewell night at Palmer's. Many large theatre parties will be on hand Saturday evening to give John Drew a send-off. His fashionable friends always make a point of coming to his farewell, and this time they promise to be as numerous and enthusiastic in the doing of it as they were in the doing of it when Mr. Drew plays two long engagements in New York.

Maurice Barrymore and E. J. Henley will appear as "bobbies" in the Irish drama, "Rory of the Hill," at the Fourteenth Street Theatre. The play, which is what somebody or other says, are Barrymore and Henley members of the "Supers" Union, a group of actors who are throwing a couple of mob-actors out of a Summer snap.

Although the new series of Killyan living pictures, "1492" has only been shown for a week it is the policy to make frequent changes. "1492" is a new picture that will be shown in place of "Cleopatra." The West Point cadets, 200 strong, are going to see "1492" on June 12.

The third success of the Germania Theatre was scored on Tuesday evening with Manager Adolf Philipp's new comedy, "Dr. Paraborst."

The 5 A's Club will give their last Sunday night entertainment of the present season at Tony Pastor's Theatre next Sunday evening. The following are the volunteers: Weber and Fields, Bessie Bonehill, Russen Brothers, James F. Hoey, Jennie O'Neill Potter, Annie Hart, George Marlon, Arthur Righty, Hattie Fairbank, May Bryant, the Brunelles, Theo. Joe Olivlier and the Lorretta.

O'Brien and Redding were added to the continuous show at Keith's Monday to supply the place of Hughie Dougherty, who has been too ill to appear. The veteran minstrel is a sufferer from catarrh, and is now receiving his operation. He is mending rapidly, however, and expects to resume work next week.

THEY MARRIED SECRETLY.

Mr. Draper and Miss Hurry Wedded More Than a Year Ago. Although Helen Schuyler Hurry has been married to William Vandervoort Draper for more than a year, the fact that they were man and wife has only just been made known to their friends.

Mrs. Draper is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Abby Hurry, of 30 West Seventeenth street, and she has been quite prominent in New York society for two years past.

Mr. Draper is the son of George H. Draper, and a grandson of the late Simeon Draper, who was once Collector of the Port of New York. They were married on April 15, 1923, by the Rev. Dr. S. M. Haskins, at St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church, South Fifth street and Bedford avenue, Brooklyn.

Why they should have concealed the marriage is not known. Their engagement was announced a year ago last Winter. Arrangements had been made to have the marriage take place at Calvary Church in this city some time during the past month, but as the time approached the young couple decided to elope the story of their wedding in Brooklyn, and the second ceremony was delayed.

Silverman Says Block Put Him at a Defective Machine. Lawyer Alfred B. Jaworower, of the Pulitzer Building, has brought an action in the City Court of New York on behalf of Louis Silverman to recover $2,000 damages from David Block, the wealthy tire manufacturer, of Elizabeth and Hester streets.

Silverman says that on April 5 he was put to work on a cutting machine, which Block knew to be defective. Immediately after he started working on it his fingers caught, necessitating an amputation.

parlor, and insinuating his burly head and shoulders between the two actresses gazed out into the street. "The fellow must be the snapper to a mighty poor whiplash," he said at last. "But I don't suppose we could do anything to help her; the man is most likely the girl's father, and if we should bring him up before the authorities the judge would shut his eyes three thickness upon us, and give us polite notice to quit the Empire or take the 'cold pisen' of its displeasure." "I will do something!" replied Lestre, stamping her foot decidedly. "I will not gaze upon such a sight and be silent. I shall speak to the old wretch concerning his brutality, and speak sharply. "Be careful; we are in Berlin and not in New York," continued Byrsa. "But of course my warning is useless. You will do as you like even if the result is a cell in a German prison," he added bitterly.

Lestre understood every working of that faithful heart, but she slipped nervously from the window and turned her back upon him while she nestled into her cap and long cloak of swansdown and left the apartment. Byrsa, after thinking a few seconds, drew on his fur-lined overcoat and warm Russian cap and hastened down the hall to the side door of the great hotel, determined, if possible, to deter Lestre from her object. He met her at the door with the young German girl in tow, while a little way down the street Herr Lausberg was hustling away beside his cart, having descended from his throne to give his dog a better chance to draw his load alone. "I have got her!" cried Lestre triumphantly. "She is mine now, my mascot, Byrsa!" "How did you manage?" asked he curiously. "Oh, I knew better than to pitch into him as I should have done yesterday," smiled Lestre. "I simply bought her for five pounds. He is her step-father, and seemed to be glad to be rid of her."
