

I was entitled to something, as I worked hard for my money and I am a poor man. You expect me to be a poor man. Well, it did not surprise me. He said he was not going to a dock on the East River, up town, then changed to downtown, and since then he had been shifting around, but he had always been assigned to posts in open docks. In fact, he made it comfortable for him as possible.

"Do you regret your refusal to give up your money to the Captain?" asked Mr. Goff. "No, sir, I never suspected it, but I see that they were. I don't see you seen Capt. Schmitzberger recently."

"No, sir. Didn't he call at your office yesterday to see you?" "Yes, I heard he was there looking for me, but I was away all day and didn't see him."

"Mr. Goff tried to get the witness to admit that he had paid money to the police for permission to obstruct the sidewalk in front of the factory, but he denied that he had ever given any money for this purpose."

And Now, Capt. Grant. Bernard W. Wolff, a liquor dealer, of 22 Ninth avenue, was the next witness. He testified that he had paid blackmail to Ward Men Logan and Dougherty, Capt. Grant's precinct, in 1933.

"They began persecuting me and interfering with my business, so I had to do something, or I would have been ruined. I was pretty independent before that, and had never been in jail."

"How much did you pay?" "Twenty dollars a week. This was in the hazy days. Once I had some trouble, I went to see Capt. Grant about it and told him that I could not afford to pay so much. He said my dues for the month—$20 in an envelope which I gave to him. He said he would make it easier for me after that."

"After talking the matter over, he said he would do so, and after that time I never paid him a cent. You gave me Capt. Grant's money?" "Yes, I told him it was for Logan, for he usually collected the money. He took it. There was no address on the envelope, but that was not necessary, he knew where to go."

Beth E. Robinson, a lawyer of 49 Liberty street, said he was coming down on the "L" to get to work on Oct. 11, and found a man in a dark suit sitting on the floor. He got up and asked the man what he was doing there. The man said he was waiting for a man named Callahan, who was supposed to be coming from the street. The man then fell down the stairs into the gutter.

man, and got off Italian and French now and then, and got along very well with applicants. "But we should stand a great deal of abuse from people whose applications we refuse, and we refuse a great many every day," said Clerk Brown. "Why, a man was going to have me summoned before this Committee, yesterday because I would not let him in."

Senator Lescow asked if the applicants were usually coached by the Clerk's office, but Brown declared this was never allowed, and that no favor was made as to any particular applicant, because they happened to be recommended by certain political workers or groups.

"Supposing you refuse an applicant, does that end it?" asked Mr. Goff. "Yes, so far as our court is concerned. They might go over to the other court and make an application there," replied the witness.

The clerk asked questions of applicants simply to facilitate the work of the court. The law does not require them to ask any questions. No record of these questions was made, however, and the judge of the court conducted his examination of the applicant entirely independently of the organizations who were helping him.

Thomas Boese, Chief Clerk of the Naturalization Bureau of the Superior Court, said that he should think 250 persons were made citizens by that court yesterday. The number every day now exceeds 6250 a day.

A recess was taken at this point. After recess, Senator Cantor was called out by the speaker, or "General," as Mr. Goff called him, resumed the witness stand.

"Has anything occurred which has led you to take steps to prevent perpetration of frauds in front of this court?" "No, sir; we try never to let any fraudulent papers get out, and with proper care, I think we can prevent them. It would be a good thing if the practice of paying naturalization fees in advance by political organizations were stopped, and each applicant made to pay his own fee."

Police Parity "Continued." Lawrence Carney, a curly-haired young man, who said he had been in the police writing building for the last two years, was the next witness.

"The witness said that he had been in the police writing building for the last two years, and that he had been in the police writing building for the last two years, and that he had been in the police writing building for the last two years."

"What, the door of the shop was kept by a policeman in uniform?" asked Senator Lescow. "Yes, he took good care of us, too," Carney said.

Carney said the lower part of the city was let out to Gammon, then came Lindauer, Morton and Murray. Meyers was let out to the street, and the witness and Al Adams all the west side from Fourteenth street up.

"What the door of the shop was kept by a policeman in uniform?" asked Senator Lescow. "Yes, he took good care of us, too," Carney said.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 11.—A special committee of the Kansas City, Kan., Council, to investigate the alleged crookedness of the police, today announced that it had secured the resignation of the chief of police, and would be afraid to walk through the streets in the evening, and that the police there would not arrest any of them.

HOCHSTADT'S CHOWDER BLACKMAIL. Leon Buck, of 117 Canal street, testified that his uncle, Mr. Rosen, had been blackmailed by a chowder ticket, and Hochstadt because he could not afford to take it. "Tell us about this chowder ticket," said Mr. Moss.

The witness begged to be left off. He said he was in the Comptroller's office and had secured it by political influence. He testified that he had been in the position and would be afraid to walk through the streets in the evening, and that the police there would not arrest any of them.

Discharged for Revenge. Buck afterwards said he was no longer employed in the Comptroller's office, and had been discharged because he had given information to the police. He said he was afraid to walk through the streets in the evening, and that the police there would not arrest any of them.

What sort of a place did Rosen keep? asked Senator Lescow. "A policy shop," Rosen replied, and told him what Hochstadt had said, and he seemed very alarmed. He did not know if it was a policy shop or not. They were $5 a piece. He told Hochstadt if he would take the business better he would give him two tickets. The ticket was for a chowder party of the Max Hirsch Association, and when asked who was the President of the Association, the witness replied: "How? T. D. Sullivan."
