

TARDY JUSTICE FOR THIS CRIME.

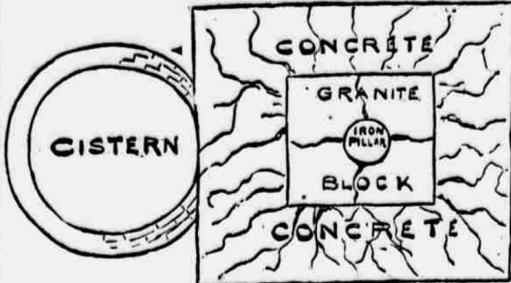

Responsibility for the West Broadway Horror Not Yet Fixed.

THE INQUEST TO-MORROW.

And Next Week, Perhaps, the Matter May Go Before the Grand Jury.

CAUSE OF THE CRASH IN DOUBT.

Coroner Fitzpatrick Declares the Old Cistern Was Not the Weak Spot.

SHOWING THE POSITION OF THE CONCRETE BLOCK RESTING ON THE EDGE OF THE CISTERNS AND SUPPORTING THE GRANITE BLOCK AND IRON PILLAR.

will be made as thorough and searching as possible.

"We have decided," he said, "that the first step to be taken is to let the case go before a Coroner's jury."

The fact that Builder J. H. Parker and his foreman, Tedford Sellick, are under $500 bonds each to answer, and that Joseph Guider, the foreman who had charge of the plastering, is also under bonds for alleged criminal carelessness, insures the attendance of all those who can be held responsible, so far as the known facts in regard to the disaster are concerned.

Whether it was defective ironwork in the upper structure that first gave way under the weight of the building material that was stored on the higher floors or whether it was weakness in the foundations of the brick pillar, which punched a hole through a granite block twelve inches thick and eight inches more of concrete and sank seven feet into the soil underneath, is still a mystery to him.

Coroner Fitzpatrick says he does not believe the old cistern found in the basement had anything to do with the accident. Only an edge of the square cement foundation rested on the top of the brick wall of the cistern, which is eight inches thick and of brick, and notwithstanding the immense force of the blow which struck the pillar, the wall of the cistern did not give an inch.

FOUGHT FOR HIS GOLD

Aged Farmer Morris's Desperate Battle with a Burglar.

Grasped the Bare Blade of a Knife and Disarmed the Thief.

His Son Slept Peacefully Through the Whole Disturbance.

On the Farmingdale road, near Glenfield, N. Y., lives John P. Morris, a straight and strong and independent. He has a large farm and a big bank account. He is sound of limb and wind, of teeth and eyes. He can follow the plough with the best farm-hand, and he works early, late and cheerily.

Yesterday morning he was up before day and walked to the fields with the dawn. He worked all day long, and, after supper, was straightway abed and asleep before the chickens had stopped crowing to one another. His last thought was, "I forgot to take that 25-cent bank, but it'll be safe enough here for one night."

By 11 P. M. old John Morris was through with sleeping for rest and was beginning his sleep of refreshment. Just then some one touched him on the shoulder.

"Come, I say, wake up, old man!" John Morris sat up in bed. In front of him stood a huge fellow with a gray cap drawn down to the edge of a black mask that completely hid his face. In one hand he held John Morris's lantern.

"You're a liar," said the man. "Give up or I'll put a bullet into that old carcass of yours!"

By this time John Morris realized that he was not dreaming. He fully grasped what was wanted of him, and he also saw clearly that he could not give up the $200 which represented so much hard work. So he gave a frightful yell and rolled out of the bed. He dashed his fist against the lantern and grabbed the man in the mask by his great legs. Out went the light and the burglar fell.

John Morris felt something like the cut of a lash across his left arm. He yelled again and in the darkness, he grasped for the pistol. Crack! it went again, but the bullet missed. And now John Morris got at the pistol and, with a wrench, made the more powerful by thoughts of his $200, twisted it out of the burglar's hand.

"You're a strong old devil!" shouted the burglar, and the old man heard the lantern which through the air, then fell to the floor. The burglar, who had been needed to make him real mad. He chased with the burglar, and they rolled over and over. The burglar, who had been old man shouting to his son to get on the shotgun and help him.

After several rolls the burglar got on top and drew a knife. The farmer felt what was coming and reached out and caught the knife by the blade. The sharp steel sunk deep into his hand, but he held on.

"Give me $5 and I'll let you go," said the burglar. "I'll let you go," said the farmer. "I'll let you go," said the burglar. "I'll let you go," said the farmer.

"Give me $5 and I'll let you go," said the burglar. "I'll let you go," said the farmer. "I'll let you go," said the burglar. "I'll let you go," said the farmer.

"Give me $5 and I'll let you go," said the burglar. "I'll let you go," said the farmer. "I'll let you go," said the burglar. "I'll let you go," said the farmer.

CRIMINALS' HOUSE BURGLAR-PROOF.

An attempt was made by thieves to enter Coroner John P. Fitzpatrick's house at Colchester Point, Conn., early yesterday morning. The burglars found the house from three doors, but they were unable to get in.

When Koch was sobered up enough to talk he fully described the watch he had had and also the appearance of the last person he remembered seeing. The description was given to the watch found on Gessani. Gessani then admitted having called Koch while the latter was still in bed in the street.

In the Tombs Court yesterday afternoon, on their superior trial, the charged Koch and held Gessani for trial in $200.

The New Man. (From the Connecticut Tribune.) "Do you allow your husband to carry a latch key?" asked the old-fashioned woman. "No, don't." "Neither do I," said the new woman. "But once 'n awhile he steals mine."

SAID HE HAD A DATE. Later Developments Showed a Stolen Watch Caused His Hate.

Policeman O'Flaherty, of the Oak street police station, while on post on Perry street last night saw Andrew Gessani, eighteen years old, of 203 Grand street, running into the street. O'Flaherty stopped the boy and asked him where he was going.

"I have a date to meet a girl in Pearl street, and as I am late I run to meet her," replied the lad.

This answer did not allay the policeman's suspicions and making a hurried search of the boy's pockets he found a gold watch to which was attached a small bit of gold chain that looked as though it had been wrenched away from some person.

The boy declared that the watch belonged to his brother, a barber at 18 Dover street, and that he had just got it from a jeweler's where it had been repaired.

O'Flaherty took the boy to the station and then went to the brother's shop. By furnishing a false description of the boy so that the barber might be induced to lie, the policeman got the information from the barber that he only had one watch and that the prisoner had had when he said the watch was his brother's.

Policeman Dowling later found August Koch, of 800 Kent avenue, Brooklyn, in an intoxicated condition at the corner of Beekman and Gold streets. When Koch was locked up at the station, it was noticed that his watch chain was missing.

When Koch was sobered up enough to talk he fully described the watch he had had and also the appearance of the last person he remembered seeing. The description was given to the watch found on Gessani. Gessani then admitted having called Koch while the latter was still in bed in the street.

THE FUNNIEST PLAY IN TOWN.

Real Genuine Laughs at These Extra Lively Performances.

The dramatic critic snarled into the office this morning, glanced hurriedly over his mail, which an office boy handed to him on a silver salver, and slammed the latest popular tune, "His Whiskers Got Tangled at Night, but He Straightens Them Out in the Morn'g," and sent the following critique to the composing room.

"There was a fairly good audience at the first performance of the rattling comedy-farce, 'The Jolly Ghoul,' or, 'Inquests Gone Wild,' which was produced, at enormous expense (to the people), yesterday in the Crowners' Theatre, on Centre street. The stage setting for the first act was remarkably realistic, real wooden doors and genuine plaster walls being used. The principal part, that of Emboller, the eccentric knockabout, was admirably sustained by the comical Mr. Heebert, who, we may say, has created the character. Mr. Heebert was wonderfully made up with a Kongal board and wig. His appearance on the stage was greeted with a laugh before he had opened his mouth. Above and Mr. Joemon, as the jolly attorney, were also very clever, and showed that they had made a careful study of their parts.

When Emboller, in the second act, turned four double-hand springs and kicked the jolly attorneys over the footlights the audience went wild, and when he picked up a war club and knocked the furniture into splinters, yelling, "Things was different, ain't it, here in the Supreme Court 'n'?" he was encored three times.

As a fun maker "The Jolly Ghoul" is all that could be wished, but it needs a little pruning in parts. The introduction of the weeping lady in mourning in the middle of the burlesque comedy scenes was hardly in good taste, although the comical Mr. Heebert, in the scene, should be cut out. There would be nothing but nonsense left which is what the audience at the Crowners' Theatre expect nowadays.
