

KATE CHASE SPRAGUE'S RELICS AT AUCTION.

Story of Love and Tragedy Discovered Through Hidden Documents That Brought One of America's Proudest Beauties to Poverty and Death.

I walk, I trust, with open eyes; I've travelled half my worldly course,
And in the way behind me lies Much vanity and some remorse; I've lived to feel how pride may part Spirits, tho' matched like hand and glove;
I've blushed for love's abode, the heart,
But have not disbelieved in love—
And love is my reward.
KATHERINE CHASE SPRAGUE.
This bit of poetry was discovered among the effects of the late Kate Chase Sprague.

CHAPTER I.

Scattered about the rooms of an auction house in West Twenty-eighth street, like the discarded goods of a torn sail, the household goods of one of America's most brilliant women await to-day their further scattering under the hammer of some glib auctioneer. They tell a tale of life and love and tragedy and sorrow.

Printed in letters of red and black over the door is the invitation. It is an epigram.
Read it:

NEXT IMPORTANT SALE.
The contents of the colonial residence of the late Hon. Salmon P.
Chase, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Removed from Edgewood, near Washington.

It seems like a dissecting-room—like some ghastly place where a post-mortem examination is being made.

For, here and there, we see the dismembered parts of the who once had Washington at her feet; the enchantress and the man of a great Senator; the doting son who helped to make the doting of the nation; the woman in whose throat Congressmen, members of the Cabinet, Ambassadors, Generals, even a President were willing captives; the woman who made and unmade men, and who died in poverty after her own brilliant life had been wrecked on the shores of that love's sea.

For here are the remains of Kate Chase Sprague.

CHAPTER II.

Gloved but vulgar fingers pick up the dainty, delicate objects of virtue which adorned the boudoir, the holy of holies, of the once-proud beauty. Ungloved and vulgar tongues toss off snarls of unclean gossip which might well be buried in the grave of poor Kate Chase, and utter suggestions sarcasms in heaping up the respectable air and evident education of their owners.

"That is the historic divan," says a woman with a chuckle. "It was taken from Gov. Sprague's residence, so they say."
"See, here in this book is a letter from an admirer. Signed 'B. C.' I wonder if that means Cheeking. I'd slip it in my pocket if that confounded clerk did not have his eye on me."

The little note which she referred to was one of the manuscript fingers pointing to the life of the woman—reads as follows:

Washington, D. C. (date not rec.) My dear Katherine, I wish I did not see you so rarely, but I could not do so. Will you be sure to write to me soon.
Another note, found between the leaves of a French novel—she was very careless about her letters, using them for book-marks, and leaving them anywhere and everywhere, for those who came after to help themselves to—read as follows:

My dear Kate: I wanted to come over and see you today. One moment with me is better than a thousand in town. But I was called home. Really, H. T. M.
Who was "H. T. M."? A man who wrote a big, masculine hand and who appreciated her—that was certain. The date was April 16, 1882.

Letters have been found in secret drawers of Kate Chase's desk, which were hurriedly burned. Her daughter took the precaution to burn them, but some say correspondence would, may turn up. But there are lots of letters still lying in books and other hidden places waiting for the resurrection which curiosity will give them.

CHAPTER III.

Her books and pictures tell much of the life of this woman. Her father's library of law and her own library were two of her treasures which never went into the warehouse or the second-hand dealers. Though the grand furniture of the grand furniture of her millions days when, as the wife of Senator Sprague, she rode her Governor, and afterward Senator from Rhode Island, she had her plate and her splendid diamonds and the loose which helped to make her the richest dressed woman in Washington were disposed of in her last years to feed and clothe her in poverty, she was never seriously sorry to see the friends of her father's name.

Many of them are poorly kept, and many of them are very fine. There are many of them and Governor and Senator Sprague's name on them. Some of them bear the name of her father, and some of them bear the name of her mother.

CHAPTER IV.

Last, but not least in interest, are the tokens of her life of poverty in the years that followed the storm; when the salt and counter-suit were compromised into a divorce on the ground of "outrage," when Gov. Sprague's bankruptcy melted his great fortune like snow in a fiery furnace and disclosed his pitiful weakness as a business man.

For year the ruined woman lived in the semi-obscurity which attends the divorced woman who fails to marry the man to whom she has sacrificed her heart, soul, her good name, often deemed more valuable than souls in this world's eyes.

In her father's home in the outskirts of Washington, the home where she won her first national and international triumphs, she lived, retired, unhappy, hiding her poverty from the sight of men, bringing up her daughters to shun the world but deceptive paths which she had trodden.

A few friends of the inner circle were still received into the famous old home.
Some of them, men high in the councils of the nation, helped for years to keep the wolf from the door. It was through their efforts that she got Government employment—that republic in which are buried the pride and poverty of so many daughters of great men.

It was they who at the last conspired to save the home to the broken-down enchanted.

Here Kate Chase lived and read and wrote and remembered the glittering past. Here she hungered and suffered.
But neither hunger nor suffering could break down the haughty pride of the once powerful beauty. When she went to Washington, in her latter years, in the old rattling, rickety, "one-hoss" shay, she sat as erect and looked out at those she passed with as scornful a glance as in the days when Roscoe Con-kling knelt at her feet and at her bidding took the Presidency away from a man who had dared to cross her path and do an injury to her father.

She had to have her flowers and her books and other little luxuries. And among the things found in the auction room are 100 U's with which she paid the freight.

Here is a specimen of two:
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1, 1882.
Thirty days after date I promise to pay to the order of Franklin Davis, surseymen, $25.00, value received, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum until paid. Payable at the Central National Bank of Washington City.

KATHERINE CHASE,
Edgewood, Washington, D. C.
This was indorsed by K. Chase and Franklin Davis, and was probably placed in a bank by Davis to secure the money for temporary purposes.
And here is another:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1, 1882.
Fifteen days after date I promise to pay to the order of Franklin Davis, surseymen, $25.00,
value received, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum until paid. Payable at the Central National Bank of Washington City.

KATHERINE CHASE,
Edgewood, Washington, D. C.
This was paid promptly on time on May 15.
Poor Kate Chase! Few women drunk deeper of the golden chalice of success.
Few drain the bitter cup of life to the dregs as she was forced to drain it. This is the final kick of Destiny; that her treasures must be scattered abroad, many of them falling into unworthy hands and the lives of an auctioneer and the queer laughter of bargain-hunting speculators.

MAY RAID "DA MONK"

Capt. Price Threatens to Suppress Depew's Illegal Concerts.

ORGAN-GRINDER MENACED.

Senator's Favorite Musician May Have to Buy a $500 Concert Hall License.

Police Captain Price has his eye on Chauncey Depew's private organ-grinder, the organ-grinder's trick monkey "Sapho" and the organ which the organ grinder grinds.
Magistrate Plummer was approached by Capt. Price in a mysterious manner this morning in the Yorkville Police Court.
They conferred in secret. The Magistrate shook his head doubtfully, consulted the code and apparently dealt out a legal opinion to Price. Price growled his thanks and withdrew.
Later it transpired that Price had consulted the Magistrate regarding the advisability of arresting Senator Depew's organ-grinder for not having a concert hall license. The Magistrate advised him not to meddle with the Italian.

Every day at lunch time, when the midday meals of Senator Depew, President Calloway, Capt. H. C. Dural and other Central officials have been carried into the Grand Central Station from a nearby restaurant a porter hangs a red flag out of Senator Depew's office.
This is a signal for Senator Depew's private organ-grinder and his monkey to take their stand under the window an unbroken tunes to add the digestive functions of the railroad magnates.
The organ-grinder was slipping off the "Forward Song," from "Carmen," yesterday noon, and the monkey was giving an imitation of the rag-time dance, when Price came along.
"What are you doing?" he demanded of the organ-grinder.
"Playa da org' whie-a da mans eat-a da din'," he explained. "Sapho, he-a da monk, dance-an' make-a da laugh."
"No got-a da lice?"
"Where's your concert license?" asked Price.
"No got-a da lice. Got-a permit from-a da boss to play-a for Chauncey Depew."
"Well, you've got to get a license or I'll run you in, see?" said Price. "Chase yourself."
Magistrate Plummer advised Price today that the organ-grinder didn't need a concert license to play while meals were being served to Senator Depew and his associates.
"Balke!" hissed Price through his mustache as he left the court. "There ain't a gambling den or a dive in the precinct, so I thought I'd raid the guy."
Fifteen well-dressed young men, caught in the raid on gambling-houses on the Bowery and in West Thirty-fourth street and indicted for their connection with these dens, pleaded not guilty before Recorder Goff to-day and went their ways.
Emanuel M. Friend appeared as counsel for most of them.

GAMBLERS ARRAIGNED.

Thirty Men Indicted for Pool-Selling Plead Not Guilty Before Recorder Goff.
Pleas of not guilty were entered by the thirty alleged gamblers who were indicted by the Grand Jury yesterday when they were arraigned before Recorder Goff this morning.
Each of the prisoners was represented by counsel. The cases were continued.
The bail bonds upon which the men were released from custody remained in force.

TWO WOMEN AND A FIRE.

Mrs. Woodard Discovered It and Ran Away; Mrs. Nolton Ran to It and Put It Out.
Mrs. James Woodard, of 23 West One Hundred and Twenty-seventh street, this morning discovered fire in a folding couch on the third floor. She threw it open. The flames burst forth and she ran screaming to the street.
Mrs. H. S. Nolton, who was in the house, ran to the top floor to put out the fire. She seized a portiere and threw it on the blazing couch. In doing this her wrapper ignited, but she extinguished the flames. The damage amounted to $500.
