TEUTONIC BROKE DOWN IN MID-OCEAN.

Accident to Port Engines Delayed the Big Liner— Mishap a Mystery.

An accident to the machinery of the White Star liner Teutonic, which arrived here to-day, compelled her to steam at half speed from midnight Monday to Tuesday.

The ship's officers were very mysterious about the accident and the passengers were more worried in consequence than if they had been told frankly what was the trouble. Their inquiries were all evaded.

They say several liners passed the Teutonic that had sailed from the other side after her. Meanwhile for a whole day they could not fall to notice that the Teutonic lagged and labored.

The weather had been heavy, which did not lessen the anxiety. All were much relieved to awake Tuesday and find the ship proceeding under full speed.

J. Pierpont Morgan and his daughter did much to relieve the passengers' anxiety. Mr. Morgan preserved a calm demeanor and conversed with his usual urbanity in the cabin.

His daughter organized games to keep the more nervous passengers amused and divert their minds from the suspicion that something was wrong with the ship.

Mr. Morgan's $200,000 yacht; the Teutonic at Quarantine, having on board the resident members of the family. Mr. Morgan declined to board the yacht, but came on the ship.

The ship's officers were still mysterious when seen by an Evening World reporter this morning. None of them from the captain down would say just what had happened to the machinery.

"Oh, it was of no consequence. The starboard engine had to do the work alone for a day. That was all. It was fixed all right."

George W. Lederer, the theatrical manager, who was returning to get his "Casino Girl" company for the Shaftesbury Theatre in London, also did much to pass the time away. He was the life of a certain set and kept the cabin in laughter by his sallies when it otherwise might have been in tears.

Mr. Lederer said: "I am going to take the 'Casino Girl' company back to London on the return trip of the Teutonic, to replace the 'American Beauty' company at the Shaftesbury Theatre. The 'Beauty' has been a financial success, but will not run like 'The Belle of New York' during the fair. James E. Sullivan comes over with me. He will take Sam Bernard's place in the Casino company."

"All London is in hysterics over the war—worse than Paris ever was."

FIEND'S WORK NOT FATAL.

Miss Bowers, Who Was Tortured by a Tramp, Will Recover.

(Special to The Evening World.) CANAL DOVER, O., June 14.—Miss Corn Bowers, the young girl who was tortured and burned by an unknown man, lies in a critical condition at her home in New Philadelphia, the county seat, three miles from here.

The perpetrator of the outrage is still at large, but there is a clue, and the belief that he will be captured is strong.

Professional opinion has been expressed that Miss Bowers will never fully recover from the effects of the fright and brutal torture she suffered at her assailant's hands. Fortunately her fair face is not marked, the burns all being on her body and limbs.

Miss Bowers recovered sufficiently last night to talk somewhat vaguely of the affair and was able to give a meagre description of the man who sprang upon her from the darkness in the rear of her own home and after attempting to assault her, tore off her clothing, fired the heap and then held her in the flames.

She said he was short, thick set and had a heavy growth of black beard. His clothes were dark colored and shabby. Altogether her description of him corresponded to that of a tramp. He uttered no word and left her after she became unconscious.

It seems impossible that the fugitive can escape. Residents and farmers are armed, and every stranger is keenly scrutinized. Many have left their work to join in the man hunt.
