

THE DAILY SHORT STORY. LOVE AND ADVENTURE

KEENE'S TUNNEL. By Prince T. Woods.

THE rain had poured for three days...

There were only two young men in the village who had work enough...

Keene closed the smithy early and made things snug at home...

That night, while the storm howled freely without, Sherman Keene sat in his comfortable armchair...

Keene dreamed on as he sat before the open fire, and it was not until the first rays of light...

When he looked out at the storm he cried out in astonishment...

As Sherman Keene looked with wide-eyed astonishment on the work of the blizzard...

Many of the brokers appeared today with white bandages over their sleeves as a warning against jostling.

Then he took a shovel from the shed and called to his mother...

He must have a tunnel big enough to hold a horse...

He thrust his weight against it, but it would not budge...

While Keene made her as comfortable as he could and built a blazing fire...

Keene took the shoe from the injured ankle and wrapped it with his handkerchief...

Keene's heart was the full of happiness to have any one...

Phone Strakosch was Violetta in the English Opera Company's first presentation of "La Traviata"...
