jestly out of complicity to the supposed murder of Von Lindheim, but in truth he was only a tool of the mad Chancellor's with a mission to learn whether or not Von Lindheim was really so ill as had been reported.

I strolled along the walk thinking of the situation of Von Lindheim, but in mind, now in front of me. We had been getting more hopeful; our plan now being that we should wait a little longer, and then all three make our way out of the country.

I had taken a turn and a half along the terrace when a sharp, low bark of suspicion from the dog broke the silence and aroused my attention. "His, Frits, old fellow! What's the matter?" I cried.

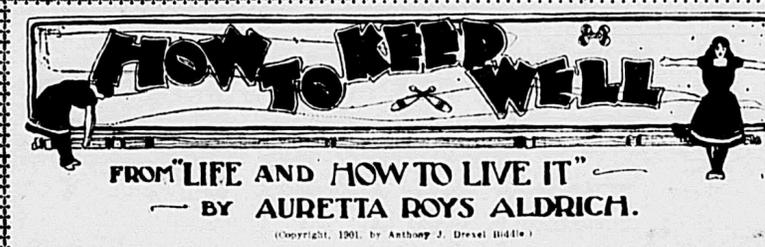

"A good guess." You could scarcely be anything else. "By my bad German, or something worse, I am sure." "By your good English."

"That's all right," he said, "but I cannot help the feeling," he said, "that the professor is not an Englishman."

"That's true enough," Von Lindheim assented; and no more was said on the subject of the night.

"I am sorry to have disturbed you," he said, "but I cannot help the feeling," he said, "that the professor is not an Englishman."

DIGESTION AND ITS IMPORTANCE.

LESSON NO. 5.

The Importance of Good Digestion—Dangers of Neglect—Hints on Strengthening the Digestive Organs.

If we were animal only, subject to nature's law through instinct alone, we could have no use for either good sense or philosophy.

There can hardly be too strong a statement made in regard to the prevalence of constipation and the extent to which it impairs circulation.
