TOBIN'S CHUM ON THE STAND.

McAenevy, Who Witnessed the Beheading of Capt. Craft, Tells the Story of the Grim Tragedy.

BLAMES IT ALL ON TOBIN.

Young Craft, Son of the Murdered Man, is a Witness Also—Tells How He Identified the Body of His Father.

Alexander McAenevy, bartender in the Empire dive where Capt. James E. Craft is alleged to have been beheaded by "Butch" Tobin, took the stand this afternoon in the trial of Tobin, which is in progress before Justice Davy.

McAenevy is accused of being an accomplice in the crime, but he consented to testify against Tobin, whom he charges with the full responsibility of the crime.

Tobin watched his former friend take the stand and appear in the witness chair. He just looked at him, but made no attempt to create a disturbance.

son of the Victim. Walter J. Craft, son of the butchered Glen Craft, identified his father's photograph. He said he had identified the body found in the Empire dive alley as that of his father.

McAenevy testified that he had seen Tobin in the dive. He identified him in court. The terrified witness tried hard to glare at the effort of the jury into a shifty look of hatred.

Tobin Wouldn't Squeal. Zeigler testified that Tobin said to him: "I could tell a whole lot if I wanted to, but I ain't a squealer."

Tobin's Queer Accusation. He told how he, another policeman and Roundman Graham, confronted Tobin with the bloody remains of Capt. Craft and tried to make him tell what he knew of the crime.

When Mr. Jerome asked for an adjournment of the hearing the eminent legal lights smiled deviously and said they were ready.

PREACHER MAYBE A WINE SELLER.

Rev. George K. McDonald, Who Resigned Pastorate, Said to Be About to Embark in the Liquor Business.

BANKER CALLS HIM A LIAR.

Says He Offered No Alcoholic Fluid Refreshment to the Dissenting Clergymen, When the Latter Dined at His House.

Members of the East Avenue Baptist Church, Long Island City, say that the Rev. George K. McDonald, who resigned the pastorate because he had been accused of wine drinking in violation of the church's covenant, is leaving the ministry to embark in the liquor business.

Rev. Mr. McDonald admits he is going into business, but he declines for the present to say in what line. He had a salary of $1,200 a year as pastor and the church still owes him money, but the dominion is not worrying about money.

Dr. W. J. Burnett, of No. 127 Third street, is one of those who take it for granted that Rev. McDonald is leaving the ministry to go into the saloon business. Dr. Burnett is President of the Long Island City Bank, and was the first person to entertain Rev. McDonald when he came to Long Island City.

CLERGYMAN WHO LEFT THE CHURCH MAY EMBARK IN LIQUOR BUSINESS.

REV. GEORGE K. McDONALD.

minutes after the reporter got to Mrs. Seldinger's, he dropped in. "There was red wine on the table at Dr. Burnett's and I drank it," said the minister. "That was my first drink. My second and last drink was at the home of Mrs. Smedley, on Eversett street. He is also a banker. I had claret there for dinner."

"I've quit the ministry. I am not dependent upon it. I am going into business right here in Long Island City. My friends will tell you that I do not drink. I have been in banquets with them and I was pressed to take wine and refused."

Banker Smedley said Rev. McDonald was mistaken about drinking claret at his dinner table. It was sauterne.

POLICE SUSPECT SILENT VICTIM.

Man with Shattered Hand, Who Asks Treatment, Believed to Be Burglar Shot Escaping.

TURFMAN'S WIFE MADE NO DEFENSE.

Mrs. Sidney I. Darrin Didn't Appear to Defend Her Husband's Suit for Divorce.

Religious differences were said to have been the foundation stone of connubial discord which culminated in the action for absolute divorce brought by Sidney I. Darrin, the owner of Lady Marks, Bell Boy and a string of race horses and the Phoenix Stables, No. 306 West One Hundred and Twenty-eighth street, Brooklyn.

The case was on trial before Justice McLean to-day. Darrin says his wife, who was Maud E. Curran, daughter of ex-Police Captain Curran, of Brooklyn, before their marriage in 1897, left him five months after their marriage and has lived with her mother at No. 124 Fourth avenue, Brooklyn. She is twenty-two years old. He is twenty-four.

One day last September he says he got word from a friend that his wife was in the Meteor Hotel, on the Prospect Park slope, and he hurried to the place. There he and his two friends, Frank McKevitt, of No. 212 St. Nicholas avenue, Manhattan, and Edward Stokes, of No. 42 Berkeley place, Brooklyn, waited he declares, until Mrs. Darrin and Charles Jones, of Brooklyn, emerged from room 2 in the hotel.

William C. Wolf, attorney for the turfman, says he secured the tintepe for the identification of Mrs. Darrin in court, from the woman herself. The tintepe is a picture of a young man and a young woman at a rustic table, and the lawyer said the man in the picture was Charles Jones, the co-respondent.

These are the allegations upon which Darrin asked for absolute divorce. Mrs. Darrin offered no opposition to the suit and was not in court.

When Mr. Jerome asked for an adjournment of the hearing the eminent legal lights smiled deviously and said they were ready.

Jerome Asks Delay. Mr. Jerome asked for a delay on the ground that new charges were being prepared.

Vogel Brothers 42nd St. Cor. 8th Ave.

The big, broad-shouldered, medium length Overcoat, the graceful Surtout, and Paddock, and the long, loose Great Coat—each one the best of its type. In style, fit and finish, they are to be compared with the handiwork of our best Fifth Avenue tailors—they have the same swing and grace of line, the same breadth and shapeliness of shoulder, and perfect set of the collar about the neck. They are designed, cut and made up in our own workrooms on a very large scale, thus enabling us to sell them to you at prices as low as the ordinary kind—price is the only feature of similarity in Vogel Brothers' clothing and the ordinary sort—in every other way our clothing is far better. Come in—you'll like to be convinced, wouldn't you?

Men's Winter Overcoats. The figure to the extreme right of the picture above shows our Great Coat just as it is—50 inches long, with very full, loose folds from the shoulder to a wide bell bottom. The figure to the extreme left is the medium length, cut on the same loose, graceful lines as the great coat, but not quite so long, reaching only to about three inches below the knee. These overcoats are made from blue and black Kerseys and Oxford Moules, and Oxford and black Friezes, at $15.

Men's Winter Overcoats. The two figures in the center of the picture above show our double-breasted Surtout and our Paddock, the ultra-fashionable overcoats for the winter—there is a certain style, a something about ours which can't be defined, that distinguishes them from the ordinary kind. The medium length overcoats and great coats at this price are specimens of perfect tailoring. Oxford, black and bluish Meltons, Moulton Velours, $20.

Men's Winter Overcoats. The man who has been paying $40 and $45 for his tailor for overcoats will be interested in ours at $25. Ours if anything are a little better than tailors can give at that price—medium length overcoats, made of fine Oxford and black Meltons, Oxford Velours and Kerseys—silk lined, $25.

For very large men who measure from 44 to 48 inches around the chest—a large assortment of Winter Overcoats in all the proper styles. Already buying for Christmas here—nothing you can give a man will make him more happy than a useful Holiday Gift. Luxurious Eiderdown Bath Robes, $2.95 to $9.95. The always welcome Umbrella, $1.50 to $9.95. Suspenders, made especially for holiday gifts, 50c. $1.00, $1.50. For the evening's rest—Smoking Jackets, $4.95 to $12.00. Initial Handkerchiefs are a pleasant, useful gift—half dozen to the box—50c., $1.00, $1.50 the box. Comfortable Slippers, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00. Neckwear in all the newest patterns and weaves, 50c., $1.00, $1.50.
