Report from Peking that Manchurian Forts Have Been Evacuated, But It Is Unconfirmed--Situation Is Very Grave.

PEKING, May 9.—The official at Newchwang who sent the story of Russia's reoccupation of the Manchurian forts telegraphs to-day that the occupation was temporary and that the Russians have now withdrawn. Official circles at Peking are mystified. Their subordinates at Newchwang have not reported the reoccupation of that place, hence there is a disposition to question the correctness of the information, although the author of the message is generally considered to be one of the ablest and best-informed foreigners in China.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Minister Takahira, representing the interests of Japan, was in conference with Secretary Hay relative to the Manchurian situation to-day for more than an hour. When he came out Mr. Takahira seemed to be much depressed.

"THE SITUATION IS VERY GRAVE," he said. Secretary Hay heard from President Roosevelt early this morning, but will give no hint of what the President said. The full facts were laid before the President by telegraph yesterday afternoon.

There seems to have been a misconception of the intentions of the United States in the crisis. It is apparent now that Secretary Hay does not favor joint action with Japan and England to coerce Russia to evacuate Manchuria. His utmost endeavors are being used to keep this country out of any entangling alliance.

RUSSIA WOULD WIN IN THE END.

The opinion of Secretary Hay is that war may come between Japan and Russia, and that England may or may not assist Japan, just as the circumstances dictate. The State Department thinks Japan may win some victories at first, but that the result will inevitably be that in the end the Bear will be found squatting on the throne of the Emperor at Tokio, and that Japan will be part of the imperial Russian domain. Russia will win, the State Department thinks, by sheer force of numbers.

The activity of the State Department has roused the Russian Embassy to realize the gravity of the crisis. Count Cassini, the Russian Minister, called at the State Department to-day to protest against any hasty interpretation of Russia's action in delaying the movement of her troops from Manchuria. The Count explained that Russia did not consider the proper time has arrived to withdraw her troops from the province, and he very plainly intimated that unless Japan abandons its suggestive naval maneuvers Russia will keep its grip on Manchuria.

It was also represented to Secretary Hay that the attitude of Japan is one of menace to the peace of nations. Ever since Japan so badly whipped the Chinese the victorious nation has been hard to curb, and owing to the Anglo-Japanese alliance the condition has become still more trying.

Count Cassini drew attention to recent reports of Russia's action in Manchuria, which he declared were inspired by enemies of his Government.

RUSSIA WILL NOT BACK DOWN.

The general tone of Count Cassini's protest was one of firm resolution and indicated that Russia has no intention of backing down from her policy.

Secretary Hay is in constant communication with Minister Conger at Peking, and with Consul Miller at Niu Chwang. The Russian reoccupation of Niu Chwang was not known in Peking until after it had taken place, and was then a matter of great surprise.

The ostensible reason for the reoccupation was for the protection of the Russian railroad interests, the Government contending that its line, the terminal of which is at Niu Chwang, was threatened and in danger. The Russian Government was also quick to explain that it had not sent troops of soldiers, but mere guards.

Advices from Consul Miller indicate that the "guards" wear the same uniform as Russian soldiers, that they are commanded by Russian army officers, that they are full armed as in war time, and that they have occupied and are manning the forts at the port entrance.

Further than this, the Russian troops have ordered great quantities of supplies and ammunition. Immense shipments of beef on the hoof have been consigned to the Russians, and the railroad has suspended public business to transport heavy shipments of war supplies to Manchuria, and especially to Niu Chwang.

RUSSIA RESPECTS THE OPEN DOOR.

PARIS, May 9.—The French Ambassador at St. Petersburg has had an interview on the Manchurian situation with Foreign Minister Lamassol, which brought out a repetition of the statement that Russia had given positive assurances to the United States that there would be no interruption of the open-door policy in Manchuria, and also the assertion that the mission of Gen. Kuropatkin, the Russian War Minister, to Manchuria was pacific.

The view held here is that Russia's assurances fully protect the United States' commercial interests. The reoccupation of New-Chwang by Russian troops is claimed to be a wholly political issue between Russia, Great Britain and Japan, and as not involving American commerce or any other American interest.

MAYOR LOW OFF FOR THE SOUTH.

Accompanied by His Wife, He Starts for a Week's Cruise on His Yacht.

Mayor Low, accompanied by his wife, his personal private secretary and several servants, boarded the yacht Surprise to-day, which at once got under way for the South. The vessel had recently been overhauled from stem to stern for the cruise in Southern waters, which the Mayor has been looking forward to for several weeks. It was only when he had finished all the business on the many Legislative bills which came before him that the Mayor determined that he could take a week's vacation. He will cruise slowly down the Atlantic coast and put in at the James River. He will start on the return trip next Saturday night. He expects to be back at his desk the following Monday morning.

During Mayor Low's absence President Forbes, of the Board of Aldermen, will be the acting Mayor, with Vice-Chairman McInnes, of the Board, acting President of that body.

CHILD FALLS TO DEATH FROM WINDOW.

Little One Waves Her Hands to a Playmate and Loses Her Balance.

Ethel Reading, four years old, fell from a window of the third floor at No. 119 Charles street this afternoon and was killed instantly. The little one was playing in the front room of her home. Her mother left her alone for a few minutes, and while she was gone Ethel went to a front window, which was open, and leaned out to watch a group of children at play in the street. At that moment she spied a little friend and began waving her hands at her gleefully. At that moment little Ethel lost her balance and tumbled out of the window. She fell first on the stone paving and her head was crushed. One of the children ran into the house and told the little one's mother. A policeman called an ambulance from St. Vincent's Hospital. The surgeon said the child had been killed the moment she struck the pavement.

BLIND BOY A MIRACULOUS.

Little Child of Tenements, Sightless from Birth, Grows Into a Musical Prodigy and Stirs the East Side.

DREAMING OF GREATNESS.

His Wonderful Rendition of Beautiful Classics on the Piano Moves to Tears the Humble Listeners.

There is joy in a humble tenement of the east side to-day, and in the happiness money plays no part. The center of interest and of admiration is Louis Firman, the prize pupil in music in the New York Institute for the Blind, Thirty-fourth street and Ninth avenue, who lives with his parents on the top floor of the double tenement No. 69 Columbia street.

Left without instruction, so that what he played would have been by ear, the blind boy has attracted the attention of those interested in accomplishments of the blind, and at the exercises of the pupils of the institution on Thursday night the lad's proficiency was the subject of much favorable comment.

A Wonderful Performance.

At the exercises a piece of music was read to him. He at once put it in writing, and having made an embossed copy of it as quickly as an expert typewriter would write a few lines on a machine, he ran his sensitive fingers over it and in two minutes had played it. The piece was a chant, and was for the purpose of demonstrating to those present the quickness of the lad in reading music and in writing it.

The career of this boy, born sightless, but with a pair of eyes blue as the skies, dead as lost worlds so far as seeing, yet as expressive as those of any person, has been little less than wonderful.

From the address it may be seen that the Firman are not rich. Little Louis was a burden. That the mother thought more of him than she did of his brothers and sisters was natural, but to a family on the east side, where every hand is trained to work, a child without sight was a hardship. It was another mouth to feed, another person to care for. So, when the lad was entered in the blind institution it was a relief. There it was thought, he would be taught some useful trade and in time might be self-supporting.

Genius in Tone and Fingers.

It did not take long for those to whom had been entrusted the training of the blind child to learn that the little hands were not made for the making of brooms, that the tips of the delicate fingers were for better efforts than doing fancy work, and that behind the closed windows of the soul there was struggling for an expression a great passion for music.

The second of the violin, the piano, the welling of the organ, made the child's blood tingle, and the soul-stirring chords of the great masters of music brought tears to his sightless eyes. With a delicacy of feeling that registers in the subject of instruction, but the path was a long, hard one. Before he could play he had to be taught to read embossed letters.

Then came the time of teaching to him the alphabet, and to place to place the embossed letters. Then the application of this system to music and the boy was ready. His little hands had been taught the key-board of the piano and the organ and the strings of the violin.

Opening a New World.

Instruction in running his fingers over the embossed letters of the music, memorizing bar after bar and then, having done so, picking out the melody, humming the tune as he read the music, and then playing it followed. It all took time.

For nine years this boy, who is now nearly twenty, has been learning along. Boys who grew up in the tenements, who pitted their little blind fellow and saw for him a life as a peddler of pencils, have grown up to drive trucks or go at some other menial work and now listen to his playing and marvel as he struts them with his music.

A piano in an east side tenement is not an everyday occurrence, but in the home of the family of the Firmans there is one. It is the boy's instrument. When he came from the institution at intervals his visits were looked for by the neighbors, and a piano, not a great instrument to be sure, but a good one, was in the room. He is playing to-day for the neighbors some of the things he hopes in the future to play to his admirers who welcomed other great musicians. Then forward and see that the instrument is played upon it as readily as his selection moves away to some place in the country. Louis is a prodigy, and this is a great longing to make for himself a name; a bright vision for a sightless soul.

His Wonderful Talent.

"Yes, he has great talent. He has been a pupil of Professor Wait, of the institution. He has some home to spend the day with his family. I seldom see him, but he has come here and played it in two minutes. I wanted an old one, so I found one that was a brand new one. I remember that he never had heard one. It was read to him. Then he sat at the machine and wrote it. He memorized it and then went to the piano and played it."

"The few bars to it, but it was a rapid test to show proficiency." And this man with long gray hair, who has given forty years of his life to his instruction in the music-covered old building, smiled like a child. The triumph of the pupil will be his. "Ah! my Louis," said the mother;

MUSIC WRITTEN FOR THE BLIND.

PROFESSOR WAIT AND HIS WONDERFUL KLEIDOGRAPH.

LOUIS FIRMAN.

"no, he cannot see. His eyes are so big, his heart is so good. There is his piano. He can play that. There is his violin and the organ, too. What tones he gets from that! Sometimes the neighbors cry when he plays. Sometimes I cry myself, and the big tears course down her cheeks. They were tears of joy and pride in her boy. The machine which is the invention of the principal of the institution is like a typewriter. The dots are never more than eight—make all the letters in the alphabet, all the characters, capitals and lower-case, and all the notes in music. Upon this machine have been written all the great operas, the classical pieces which the prize pupil has learned to play. The Firman boy is not ready to leave the institution yet. When he does, those there hope it will be to realize his dream. At present his audience is his family and the neighbors, to whom there is no greater music than that he gets from the piano in the corner of the Columbia street tenement."

GROUT OPPOSES SUBWAY PLANS.

Comptroller Says Engineer Parsons' Scheme for Extension Is in Violation of Municipal Ownership Principle.

Comptroller Grout to-day declared that all the plans of Chief Engineer William Barclay Parsons for an extension of the subway system were simply extensions of existing corporations and in violation of the principle of municipal ownership.

"In all of Mr. Parsons' plans," said the Comptroller, "there is one serious defect which invariably prevents their acceptance by the city. Each of the extensions suggested by him is an extension of the lines of some existing when we will have municipal ownership is rendered futile."

"Every one of the lines projected by Mr. Parsons is an extension of an existing elevated or surface line—either the Boro, the Third Avenue, the Manhattan Elevated Company, the New York Central Railroad, and the hope of municipal ownership is blasted before the present railway is completed."

"There is no reason on earth why the city should not have its own rapid transit system without the co-operation of the corporations. We should have an underground system complete in itself. The present subway is to be tied up for seventy-five years, and during that long term the city will be tied down to a powerful corporation."

The extensions are made a system independent of the transportation companies the day will never come when we will have municipal ownership of the railroad lines in this great city."

UP FIFTY TIMES ON ONE CHARGE.

After Waiting Nearly Five Years, the Coroner's Report is Filed and Engineer Tate Goes Free.

After appearing in court more than fifty times in answer to a charge of homicide that had been on record against him for almost five years, Engineer Philip Tate, of the Long Island Railroad, was discharged by Magistrate Conorton in Long Island City yesterday. A delayed report of the Coroner's inquest was responsible for the unique case.

On Nov. 25, 1898, the train of which Tate was the engineer struck and instantly killed Mrs. Winnie Whalen, a milliner, who lived in Manhattan. Tate was arrested and released on bail. A few days later a jury held an inquest, but the report was not made to the court.

MURDER SUSPECT RAN FOR FREEDOM.

Wanted in Philadelphia, Daniel Roe Is Caught After a Chase in Newark.

(Special to The Evening World.) NEWARK, N. J., May 9.—Followed by a crowd of about 300 persons, Daniel Roe, alias Henry Jackson, of Philadelphia, led Policemen Wolzenburg and Kuhn a lively chase to-day in Market street. He was captured finally and taken to the First Precinct, where he will be held until papers for his extradition can be received here.

He is wanted for complicity in the murder of Joseph Butler, who was shot through the heart in a saloon brawl in the Quaker City almost a year ago. His arrest came about in a peculiar manner.

He had been in the custody of the police for almost forty-eight hours on a charge of being a tramp, without his identity becoming known. An hour after his discharge he was recognized by William A. Ballard, of Philadelphia, who told the policemen about him.

When the man noticed policemen going towards him he darted into a saloon, where he hid for some time, and then after upsetting everything portable in the saloon, he retraced his steps down Market street, followed by a crowd and the two bluecoats. After running a few blocks the officers caught him and landed him in a cell.

PASSENGERS HURT ON STATEN ISLAND BOAT.

Castleton Crashed Into Her Slip with Such Force that They Were Thrown from Their Feet.

In entering her slip on the New York side this afternoon the Staten Island ferry-boat Castleton crashed into the slips with a force that threw many of the passengers from their feet. It was the first trip of the boat after an extended stay in dry-dock. Capt. Sam Coler was in command.

There were between 200 and 300 passengers on board, most of them women and children—a typical Saturday afternoon shopping and matinee crowd. Mrs. Lippencott was thrown to the deck with such force that her right arm was broken. Her companion, Mrs. Van Houtenberg, was huried against a railing and fainted. Both live in Mr. Wood's boarding-house at No. 105 Montgomery avenue, Tompkinsville. A physician was called, and after medical attention both returned to their homes.

For a few minutes there was a panic on the vessel.

Enthusiastic Crowd Shouts Itself Hoarse at Spring Conests of New York Interscholastic Athletic Association.

YOUNGSTERS THROUG FIELD.

Main Interest Centred in Sheffield, of Berkeley, and Ellingwood, of Dwight, of Whom Great Things Were Expected.

BERKELEY OVAL, Morris Heights, May 9.—With perfect weather conditions, and in the presence of a large crowd, the twenty-fifth annual spring championship events of the New York Interscholastic Athletic Association were held this afternoon. Followers of the eight schools competing for the honors were out in force, and their cheering and singing would have done justice to the Yale-Princeton football match.

In all quarters of the field the various school colors were displayed. Long before the time set for the first event the field was alive with youngsters warming up, and from appearances all were in perfect condition.

Interest was centred in Sheffield, of Berkeley School, and Ellingwood, of Dwight School. Much depended on the work of these two youngsters toward winning the honors for their respective schools.

"They say Sheffield will score thirty points," said one of the fair sex in the grand stand to her companion, "but wait and see Ellingwood just walk away from him. Why this boy Ellingwood is a wonder."

Just then Ellingwood made his appearance and the girl cried out: "There he is! There he is!" "Isn't he just lovely?"

It was apparent that she was a follower of Dwight School.

Dr. White, of Berkeley School, was on hand early and predicted a victory for his school by 75 points. Athletic Director Seixas, of Dwight School, would only say "Wait and see."

The first event was started promptly at 2 o'clock.

SEVEN NOW HELD IN BARREL CASE

Diovani Vaconi, Named by Coroner's Jury as One of the Accessories to Murder, Is Under Arrest.

SIX WITNESSES DISCHARGED.

They Had Been in the House of Detention, but It is Now Admitted by the Coroner that They Had No Connection with the Case.

Diovani Vaconi, the seventh person named in the verdict of the Coroner's jury as an accessory to the murder of Benedetto Madonia, whose body was thrust into a barrel, was arraigned in the Centre Street Court to-day. He is the proprietor of the butcher shop at No. 16 Stanton street, where the murdered man is said to have been seen before his mutilated body was found.

Two other Italians were arrested as suspects in the case. They are charged merely with being suspicious persons, and the police refuse to make their names public.

Six Men Released.

The Coroner has discharged from custody six of the men arrested originally and held as witnesses.

Against the men discharged there was nothing to show they ever had been connected with either the Mafia or anything else of a disreputable nature, and least of all that they had anything to do with the murder of Madonia.

The men released are Domenico Gucor, Morenzo and Vito Lombardo, Giuseppe Lando, Nicola Festa and Giuseppe Lando.

After more than two weeks of imprisonment the men were told they were free. The Coroner had hastened to meet their relatives and friends who were awaiting their release.

"We were treated well in the House of Detention," said one of the men through an interpreter, "but why we should have been locked up I cannot say, unless it was that we might have eaten in some restaurant with our fellow-countrymen who the police say are guilty. Surely we would have been on hand as witnesses. There was no need to lock us up and keep us away from our families and our work."

Coroner's Explanation.

Coroner Scholer said: "It is sometimes a hardship to keep men locked up. But the men were not in prison; they were in the House of Detention only, and as witnesses, and no stain attaches to their character unless the police say so. It was done to insure their presence when needed in the course of the investigation."

"A grave crime had been committed and every precaution had to be used until the matter was cleared up. Some of the men arrested originally were desperate men. The men discharged were not. They had been seen in places frequented by them. It would have been the same no matter what nationality was involved."

Henry J. Goldsmith swore out writs of habeas corpus for three of the men named under the verdict of the Coroner's jury. They call upon Coroner Scholer and the Warden of the Tombs to produce the bodies of Vito Lando, Pietro Inzerillo before Justice Schoff on Monday.
