 Deputy Sheriff Kelly brought down to the Mesons just before the vessel sailed a young man whose name, he said, was "Manny" Wagner. "Manny," it appears, was employed by a firm in this city. He was sent to the bank with $200 of the firm's money. He did not show up until in the custody of a detective. He was charged with grand larceny, and Judge Newburger suspended sen- tence. A well-to-do uncle in New York promises that the man, who had been in this country but eight months, would be sent home if this was done, and this morning "Manny" began his journey.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.
 George de Jersey is persecuted by his younger brother, Harold. To save his own life and that of his baby daughter, Daisy, George disappears. Harold, the child, is left in the hands of a woman named Nickleby, who becomes engaged to her twenty years later. A mysterious beggar, Clara, announces her marriage to Harold, and threatens to disclose his father's secret.

CHAPTER VI.

Revisited.

LEAVING the lovers for an instant to await the coming of the father, let us return to the chandler's shop.

Scarcely had they gone than old Dan, closing the door, went to the sideboard, and taking from it a desk, set it upon the table. Blowing the fire until a red glow lit up his white hair like a crown of snow, he unlocked the desk, and, taking from it an old-fashioned silk- net purse, sat down by the fire again, and, turning over the purse in his hand, murmured:

"Twenty years ago, my poor Daisy—she was like to have perished in the snow! Ah, how had men are when their passions get the better of them! Twenty years ago—and yet it might be but yesterday, I mind me so well the poor thing's face. Mad, maybe, but he loved little Daisy—he loved her, poor little, was that, or he'd never have been so earnest-like, and old Dan has kept his trust, too. No harm has come nigh her; she has been as happy as a bird in the nest, and now, with a handsome lad to wed her, old Dan can lay his hand on his foolish old heart and say, he's kept his trust—kept his—what that?"

For the door was suddenly burst open, and the ragged figure of the beggar rushed into the room, a horrified look impressed upon his face and a terrified look in his dark, piercing eyes. Old Dan started to his feet; but before he could utter a word the man seized him by the hand and whispered in his ear:

"Where has she gone? Where has she gone?—to him—to him!" and then ran into the street, beckoning with his hand.

Old Dan caught up his hat, filled with some dread of impending ill to his darling Daisy and followed after.

Five minutes passed, Daisy looking around the room and up at her lover's gloomy face with wonder and fear. Then a footstep was heard upon the stairs, and Mr. de Jersey entered.

Daisy shrank back from his gleaming eyes, but Clara took her by the hand, said, throwing back his head, said:

"She is here, sir! Look in her face and tell me if she is unworthy to be your daughter."

Mr. de Jersey uttered a harsh laugh and turned away; but suddenly, as if awed by some unknown influence, turned and looked at the shuddering girl.

"As he did so a change came over his face, and, with a low cry, he strode a step forward.

At that instant a loud knock was heard at the door, a sound of hurried footsteps came along the hall—the

BURNED HIS HANDS

PUTTING OUT FIRE

Dr. William Rodgers Injured When Fighting Flames in House of Real Estate Man—Policeman Also Hurt.

Policeman James Crotty, of the East Sixty-seventh street station, and Dr. William Rodgers put out a fire to-day in the rear room of a four-story brown stone house at No. 513 Lexington avenue, occupied by Fisher Lewine, the real estate man.

The wind blowing into the house through an open window carried a lace curtain on a burning gas jet. The fire was well under way before a servant had discovered it. Her cries on the street brought the policeman and the physician into the house. They found out that the only thing to do under the circumstances was to throw the burning things out of the window into the yard. In so doing Crotty's coat caught fire and in smothering this Dr. Rodgers burned his hands. Crotty's hands were also badly burned.

When the fire department arrived the fire was almost extinguished. The damage was $5
