

others who lost more than they could afford, of partners giving firm checks for losses of ruin and sorrow that followed high play in the so-called first-class houses.

"And all this time," he continued, "the police were after the little stuss players of the east side and the pickers of the tenements, while they paid no attention to the places frequented by the rich. So marked was this discrimination that when I came into office I endeavored to get evidence against the class of gamblers these two men represent. It was well known that gambling was conducted in these places as openly as the Fifth Avenue Hotel is conducted as a hostelry."

A SEEMING INCONSISTENCY.

Then followed a detailed statement of the difficulties he had experienced in getting evidence against Canfield, although he had just asserted, in effect, that the place was as open as a hotel. He told about the protest sleuth Jacobs getting the alleged evidence upon which the Canfield raid was made two years ago, and of how he discovered only a few days ago that Jacobs was never in Canfield's at all.

"Jacobs," he said, "is now in the Tombs awaiting sentence, a confessed perjurer. But I was satisfied that there were others who could give the desired evidence."

Here he told of his struggles in getting the Dowling act passed, and how Canfield and Bucklin called upon him when the Court of Appeals sustained the measure and offered to plead guilty.

"It is only fair to say for these men," Mr. Jerome went on, "that since Dec. 31, 1902, there has been no gambling in the house mentioned in this indictment, which is based upon crimes committed before that time. A crime so old as that I should not have prosecuted had it not been for one thing—I had determined that there should be no discrimination."

WANTED TO SHOW 'EM.

"I wanted to prove to the powerful gamblers that they were just as powerless against the law as the friendless ones. This offense has been almost outlawed by the statute of limitations, and the time has gone by when there was a practical license for the maintenance of a gambling house."

"I asked the Court that imprisonment be not inflicted upon these men, but that the maximum fine be imposed. I don't think that the law against gambling will be considered a blue law in the future and hereafter, in cases of this kind, I will ask that the punishment fit the crime."

"With regard to these defendants the nuisance has been abated in this city and also in Saratoga, where or years ago and disgrace have been brought upon the State of New York, involving Governors, State officers, members of the Legislature and the District-Attorney of that city and community."

Justice Cowing announced that in view of the recommendation of the District-Attorney he would fine each man the maximum penalty for the offense, $1,000. Bucklin pulled four $500 bills out of his pocket and handed them to the Clerk of the Court and the case of the State against Richard Canfield was closed.

PROSECUTION COST $30,000.

Thus after an expenditure estimated at $30,000 the District-Attorney has failed to make good his threat to send Dick Canfield to jail. The case has been before the Court of Appeals twice, once everything was ready for a change of venue, but the District-Attorney refused to move it for trial. It was said that Canfield paid $20,000 to his counsel, John B. Stanchfield and Curtis, Arms & Keenan.

"Surely it is an edifying sight," said the District-Attorney on Dec. 15, 1902, "to see a felon standing up for his constitutional rights. Canfield has proved himself to be a plain, unmitigated, venerated blackguard."

After Canfield and Bucklin had paid their fine the District-Attorney ordered $5,000 worth of gambling implements, seized at the time of the raid, to be destroyed. It was taken to the cellar, broken up with axes and fed to the furnaces.

service men and others who have been watching her at the New Amsterdam Hotel this afternoon. Made ill by the constant presence of a crowd around her abode, she tried to elude the watchers, but made a miserable failure of the attempt.

At 2:30 o'clock Mrs. Chadwick's son, Emil Hoover, left the hotel and went over to Broadway, where he got a carriage. The carriage stood in front of the hotel, and a big crowd gathered. Some girls were brought down by servants, and then Mrs. Chadwick, dressed in brown and heavily veiled, appeared with her son and her maid. They got in the carriage, pulled down the shades and drove away.

SEEKS HAVEN IN ANOTHER HOTEL.

A dozen carriages followed them, also about two hundred people on foot. They drove across Twenty-first street to Fifth avenue, up to Twenty-ninth street, across to Sixth avenue, down to Twenty-sixth street, across to Broadway and then to the Hotel Breslin, at the corner of Twenty-ninth street.

There Emil Hoover jumped from the carriage and rushed inside. "I'm looking for protection for a helpless woman," he yelled at the clerk. "I demand protection from these detectives and others for a hounded woman."

"We can give you rooms," said the clerk. "Who is the woman?" "Mrs. Chadwick," said the boy. "She is my mother, and I want protection for her from these people."

The clerk gave the lad the keys to rooms Nos. 708, 710 and 712, the best rooms in the house. He went out and got his mother and they went into the hotel and to the rooms. The Secret-Service men took up their posts in the hotel and Mrs. Chadwick was no better off than she was before she left the New Amsterdam.

CARNEGIE WILL NOT PROSECUTE.

Andrew Carnegie announced to-day at his home that under no circumstances could he be induced to criminally prosecute Mrs. Cassie L. Chadwick, of any other person, for forging his name to the notes for $1,250,000, of which $750,000 is held by the Citizens National Bank, of Oberlin, O., as security for loans made to Mrs. Chadwick, who is supposed to have the other, which the bank officials indored.

Mr. Carnegie was in immense good humor when he was asked by an Evening World reporter what he meant to do about the forging of his name.

"Well, in the first place, nothing can induce me to prosecute Mrs. Chadwick," he said. "Why should I go out of my way to prosecute this woman?"

HAS NOT HURT ME, SAYS CARNEGIE.

"I really am very proud of this thing. Why should I mix up in a case which has really given me great personal satisfaction? It is not in the least disagreeable to me to have such a tribute paid to my name. And, besides, this woman has done me no harm. She has only brought before the public a very advantageous thing—that my credit is A No. 1."

"Now, I know nothing about this Mrs. Chadwick save what I have read in the newspapers. I know nothing of these notes save what I have read. The woman's personality is entirely unknown to me. I have made no appointments with any of the persons who are alleged to have been duped by her. If they come to see me I shall be glad to see them, and if they have forgeries of my signatures to show me, why, of course, I should like to see those. It will all be very interesting to me."

"But if they, or anyone else, thinks I am going to prosecute a woman who has paid me the compliment that she has, he is very much mistaken." A peculiar situation in the affairs of Mrs. Chadwick has developed to-day. It is simply this, that the creditors are now moving heaven and earth to prevent the United States authorities and the Ohio State authorities from taking any criminal action against Mrs. Chadwick until they have had an opportunity of forcing her into some kind of a cash settlement.

CREDITORS SEEK ONLY FOR CASH.

The creditors want cash, not revenge, and that is why they have not taken the notes to Mr. Carnegie and proceeded to have those responsible for making them arrested for forgery. In the mean time, however, the Committee of the Currency is pressing for action, while in Ohio the authorities are insisting that something be done to vindicate the outraged laws of the State.

Eleven jurors had been accepted at the trial of Nan Patterson for the murder of Caesar Young, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court to-day, and it is fully expected that the twelfth juror will be sworn in at the morning session to-morrow. Then Prosecutor Rand will proceed with his opening.

When the eleventh juror was sworn twenty-five talesmen had been examined. Because of various character had reduced the venire of 300 to almost half the number, so that there are only a score left from whom to draw the last juror.

Women Are Excluded. Miss Patterson was greatly comforted by an order issued to-day by Justice Davis, under which women who have no direct interest in the case will be excluded from the trial.

He instructed the court officers guarding the entrance to the tribunal to keep the doors closed against every woman who sought an entrance, no matter what her condition, or who her sponsor. That this judicial command will be carried out inexorably was shown when an Assistant District-Attorney engaged in the prosecution of the accused, sought to pass several handsomely gowned women into the trial room.

Among other guests were Senator De-... former Gov. Black, Cornelius N. Bliss, Whitelaw Reid and J. Hamilton Fish.

POEM WRITTEN IN COURT TO-DAY BY NAN PATTERSON.

Life's highest hope, its sweetest peace, In ours. Can we forget And mend the broken, sorrowed past, Whose memories spell regret? The fairest rose conceals a thorn, And after pleasure, pain; And happy some, and some forlorn Yet life is not in vain. The cross is heavy and hard to bear, And narrow the way and straight. Your life is e'er self-sacrifice—Don't learn this lesson late.
