

FIXER OF EARS AND WOMEN'S NOSES IS HELD

Both Sexes Willing to Give Big Sums for Nelden's Beauty Services.

Dr. Andrew L. Nelden, fraser of wrinkles, reducer of double chins, transplanter of ears and noses, and guarantor of beauty by aid of dermatology, was to-day arraigned before Magistrate McAvoy in the Tombs Court, charged with getting money under false pretenses.

These letters reveal feminine and in some instances masculine vanity in its acute form. Many of them are sad commentaries on the writer's failure to accomplish the desired improvement on nature.

Crow's Feet Deeper, She Says. Mrs. Josephine Ware, of No. 125 East One Hundred and Twenty-ninth street, came on to this city from Denver, where she had a large dressmaking establishment.

"When I was first introduced to Dr. Nelden's sanitarium," said Mrs. Ward to the police, "I found that all his employees were beautiful women. The stenographer was ravishing the maids were handsome and the cook really beautiful. This greatly encouraged me, for I was given to understand that the Nelden treatment had brought them to this state of perfection."

"I became a patient at the house, and besides paying a fee of $300 gave $2.50 a day for my board. When Dr. Nelden began his treatment I found that it was heroic. He endeavored to take out the crow's feet with carbolic acid and was nearly blinded. Deep scars caused by the acid only served to make the wrinkles deeper and my disfigurement greater."

Mrs. R. W. Cash, of No. 1421 G street N. W., Washington, D. C., told Assistant District Attorney Chadwick that she had come on to Dr. Nelden to have a double chin taken away. "I have more of the double chin than ever," she said, "and besides am terribly scarred with acid."

Confident that her appearance would be improved if her ears were set farther back, Mrs. W. B. Allen, of No. 55 Drexel avenue, New York, came to Dr. Nelden and asked to be repaired. She declared to Mr. Chadwick that a sad blotch had been removed from her forehead, and that she had been treated with acid.

Complaints in Letters. These are some of the remarkable letters that were written to Dr. Nelden home by Detective-Sergeant McConville. "Dear Sir—I write these few lines to tell you the treatment you gave me for the wrinkles on my face. I am very sorry to say, you told me that you would give me six weeks. Put that all gone getting worse every day. It is hard to think that you would give me such treatment and it has done me no good."

"Dear Sir—My nose is entirely too small and I wish to have a new-shaped nose made. I enclosed you drawings, one showing the way my nose looks now and the other showing the way I want it to look. Joan Bloom, of South Milwaukee, Wis., wrote to Dr. Nelden in the hope of having her nose changed. This is how he opened the bargain:

"Dear Sir—I am willing to part with one of my ears in exchange for $500 in exchange for one ear not perfect as mine. I am willing to go with only one ear. I will give my consent as once, if you see fit to send me a free ticket. As I have been out of work I am almost forced to give my consent in the matter."

Dr. Nelden's Defense. Dr. Nelden declares in his own defense that the complainants would all have been cured if they had continued his treatment. "I think," he said, "that the best recommendation that I can have from my patients is the fact that the St. George Hospital, recently opened on Grand street, and which has been made possible through voluntary contributions of my patients to aid a charity, the necessary for which was fully demonstrated in the few weeks the hospital has been open."

NO PROOF HE KILLED WIVES, CARLTON SAYS

Man Accused by Companion in St. George Hotel of Giving Him Mysterious Tablets Defies Coroner to Exhume Bodies.

Behind the arrest of Frederick E. Carlton, the young Englishman who is in custody on a charge of grand larceny, is a remarkable story of alleged wrongdoing, which will involve a fresh investigation into the deaths of Carlton's two wives and an alleged attempt on the life of H. B. Schaub, chief machinist of the submarine boat Porpoise, now at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard.

When Carlton was arraigned in the Adams Street Court the charge of vagrancy was changed to that of grand larceny in the first degree, Schaub making the complaint. Magistrate Dooley held the man in $2,000 bail for examination on July 13.

Schaub claims that, after getting $700 from him under false pretenses, Carlton induced him to meet him at the St. George Hotel, Brooklyn, and that he there gave him whiskey to drink, which made him ill and had a very bitter taste, and also filled a pipe with tobacco in which he had placed several white tablets the exact nature of which is not known at present.

The whiskey and tablets are in the hands of Austin De Lisle, a chemist, of Fifth avenue and Forty-second street, Manhattan, who is making an analysis of them. Schaub expects a report from him to-morrow.

Dr. De Lisle said to-day: "I have received the whiskey and the tablets, but I have not had time to analyze them yet. I ought to be able to give a preliminary report to-morrow morning."

"I doubt very much the value of any evidence that might come from the condition of the whiskey, as it came to me unsealed. There is nothing to show that it has not been tampered with between July 6 and yesterday; in fact, it has apparently been easy of access during that time."

Carlton's Strange Admissions. Coroner Flaherty started an investigation this afternoon with a view to finding out how much evidence there is to justify him in exhuming the body of the second Mrs. Carlton. The first witness examined was Schaub. Schaub testified that he had a conversation with Carlton while they were living at No. 18 Sands street about the case of the double-chin than ever. He alleged to have been the cause of Mrs. Carlton's death.

"What did Carlton say about it?" was asked. "He said, 'Oh, they can't prove anything,'" replied Schaub. "Beyond that he would never discuss the death of either Mrs. Carlton and he never would talk about the death of the first Mrs. Carlton."

Schaub said further that Carlton once told him in an off-hand manner that he had been married six or seven times, but that no one knew who his wives were. He also said that Carlton had a small apothecary's scale in his room at No. 18 Sands street on which he made and mixed powders. For what purpose he did this Schaub said he did not know.

Woman Threatens Schaub. One of the statements made by Schaub and others interested in having Carlton arrested, was that he is now engaged to a Miss Eleanor Vandeventer. Miss Vandeventer lives at No. 115 Schermerhorn street, Brooklyn, in a respectable boarding-house kept by a Miss Ellis. She was found there to-day and said that instead of being Miss Vandeventer, she is Mrs. Vandeventer, and that for four months she has been living at the house with Carlton as Mrs. Carlton.

"Yes, I am Mrs. Carlton here, all right. I have been for four months. We are not married yet, but we are going to be. Schaub did all this out of revenge. He is crazy because I took up with Carlton and refused to have anything further to do with him. He's been as good to me as a woman could want a man to be. He's a fine gentleman, but Schaub—ugh! Just wait until I get hold of Schaub. Would you like to know what I'll do to him, the jealous creature? I'll show you!" and Mrs. Vandeventer went to a bureau, pulled open the drawer with a violent jerk, dislodged a lot of silken lingerie and from underneath hauled out a 38-caliber revolver. She waved this around excitedly and then continued:

Will "Ghosh Schaub." "That's what I'll do to Schaub. I didn't live in the West for nothing. I know how to shoot and shoot straight. If I get my hands on Schaub after this is over I'll show him which is the better man."

"I've not nothing to conceal about myself. You can have my whole history. My name was Eleanor Jones, and I was married eight years ago to Mr. Vandeventer. I lived with him six years. I have a little girl named Eleanor, who is now living with my mother. The rest you know."

"Is your life insured?" was asked. Mrs. Vandeventer pulled out two policies, one for $150 and one for $250, in which her estate is named as beneficiary. "Schaub is a fine one to 'holler,'" she continued. "Why, if Mr. Carlton owes him $100 he can get it any time."

WOMAN FOUGHT TWO MEN TO END LIFE IN RIVER

PORTCHESTER, N. Y., July 13.—Mrs. Mary Gleason, forty-five years old, the widow of William Gleason, who died two years ago in the Hudson River State Hospital, at Poughkeepsie, attempted suicide by throwing herself into the Byram River to-day.

Her life was saved by Soren Iverson and Charles Siltz, two mouldeers in a foundry here, who nearly lost their own lives in rescuing the woman.

Workmen saw Mrs. Gleason walking to and fro on the bridge over the Byram River. She kept looking at the water and talked to herself in an excited manner. As they watched her she vaulted the railing and plunged into the water.

Iverson, who was looking out of a window of the foundry, which is near the bridge, rushed down to the river bank and explained what she meant when she wrote in a letter "Louis is my best yet. No money in it."

A warm and stormy love letter to "Louis" was the subject of a cross-examination by Richard Lindbury. Mrs. Meyers was shown several letters she had written. She was asked to explain what she meant when she wrote in a letter "Louis is my best yet. No money in it."

Mrs. Gleason struggled so fiercely, however, that her would-be rescuer was unable to bring her to the shore and he was being dragged beneath the surface when Siltz jumped in to his aid.

WORLD'S EXPOSE OF EQUITABLE GRAFT MAKES ALBANY ACT

Investigation by Legislature Hurried by Exclusive Disclosure of Testimony in Hendricks Hearing and Fear of Further Scandals.

ALBANY, N. Y., July 13.—It was stated to-day by one of the lieutenants of Chairman Odell, boss of the Republican State Machine, that the programme for legislation in the Equitable matter at the present special session would be formulated early next week and be presented to the Legislature as soon as the joint session finished the investigation of the Hooker case. This, it is expected, will be either Thursday or Friday of next week.

A conference of leaders will be held here probably on Tuesday. The Evening World's informant said: When Gov. Odell came out in favor of immediate action by the Legislature in the Equitable matter, he showed his keen sense of political necessities. To delay any longer would mean disaster to the party organization.

"The expose in The World of the conditions existing in the Equitable has aroused a storm of indignation. If some remedy is not offered at this session, the Governor will be forced in a month or two to call the Senators and Assemblymen to Albany again, at a considerable expense to the State and the members, to deal with the insurance situation. Conditions may then be so serious and the demand of the policy-holders for a thorough overhauling of all companies so insistent, that nothing would be left for the administration to do but order a Legislative investigation.

Fear Other Scandals. "Every one knows what that would mean. It would result in the raking up of all sorts of evils, involving in questionable transactions of prominent financiers and public men and the greatest scandal the State has ever known."

Gov. Odell and certain far-seeing men in the insurance world perceive this, and they are eager to prevent it, by having prompt action at the present special session; that is, by enacting a law affecting all insurance companies and making it impossible for officers of such companies to use the funds of the policy-holders for their own profit.

Bill to Restrict Investments. "One bill could be drawn that would cover the whole question. It could confine the field of investment of the funds of insurance companies in the same manner that the field for savings banks investments is limited, and could further prohibit insurance companies from having any connection with trust and other subsidiary companies. A law of this kind would go a great way to quiet the restless minds of policy-holders who are now clamoring for relief."

Governor Opposes Plan. Gov. Higgins repeated to-day that he still believed that any legislation at this session would be impossible. He said he would probably go to his home in Glen for over Sunday, and that he had no appointment with Chairman Odell or any other Republican leader to discuss the Equitable situation. Those on the inside of the Legislature, however, will be brought around next week.

The Odell Senators and Assemblymen are all lined up to support the boss in favor of prompt legislative action. They say that the insurance companies would either take a leading role in the fight and not do as the Gas Trust did last winter—fight a conservative measure and force a legislative inquiry, which resulted in the enactment of drastic laws.

DEPEW HAS NOT RESIGNED, SAYS MORTON

Chairman of Equitable Denies Senator's Statement Made in Paris.

The weather they are having over in that dear Paris seems to have affected the usual accuracy of Senator Chauncey M. Depew. To a World correspondent in Paris yesterday Senator Depew announced that he had resigned as a director of the Equitable Life, and that he had handed his resignation to Mr. Morton just before sailing for Europe.

Now comes Mr. Morton and politely says that Senator Depew did nothing of the kind. So far as Mr. Morton knows, Senator Depew is still a director in the Equitable Life.

"Of course," says Mr. Morton, "Senator Depew may have thought he resigned. But it was an informal matter, purely."

"I was very busy about the time he went away. Probably two or three days before he came back to my office and told me that I might get his resignation at any time I saw fit. That was all he said."

TENEMENT SET ON FIRE 7 TIMES

Persistent Incendiary Makes Repeated Attempts to Burn Third Avenue Building Which Shelters Thirteen Families.

Fire Marshal Seery and the police of the Tremont station are trying to discover the identity of an incendiary who has tried to burn the five-story brick tenement at No. 270 Third avenue, seven times since Monday. The building houses thirteen families and is owned by Carson Herzog, of No. 803 First avenue.

The first fire occurred Monday night, when a pile of oil-saturated rags was discovered burning in the basement of the tenement. Thursday night similar blazes were discovered five times in the same basement. Last night a blaze was discovered on the fourth floor of the building. Fortunately she discovered in each case were in time to prevent the flames spreading.

MINIATURE EARTHQUAKE IN WHITEHALL STREET.

Compressed Air in the Brooklyn Subway Causes Uplheaval of Pavement.

Crowds about the elevated railroad terminal and ferry-houses at the foot of Whitehall street were very much alarmed this afternoon when a section of the pavement about twenty feet in diameter and roughly circular in shape suddenly rose with a dull roar.

Portions of it rose six or eight inches above the general level. Some fell back and some remained aloft, while large cracks appeared between the lines of stones.

Workmen from the Subway tunnel appeared and said that a quantity of compressed air and water had escaped from the Brooklyn tunnel, directly under the pavement. A section of the stones was dug up, and a hole was pierced through the earth underneath. Then a small geyser of compressed air and water came up. The pressure being relieved, the pavement fell back to its normal position.
