STORM LOWERS HEAT AFTER 51 MORE DEATHS

Continued High Temperature Earlier in the Day Worked the Worst Havoc of Torrid Period, the Fatalities Being Far Above Those of Yesterday.

WEATHER INDICATIONS FOR TO-DAY.

Probable local thundershowers to-night or Thursday, not quite so warm; northwest to west winds.

TEMPERATURE.

Table with columns for To-Day, Yesterday, and temperature readings for various times of the day.

When 51 deaths from the heat since midnight had been recorded and the hospitals were overcrowded with heat prostration cases a thunderstorm came out of the West this afternoon and afforded some relief to the lower end of Manhattan Island and part of Brooklyn.

The storm was brief in duration, but the rainfall in the City Hall section was heavy for a few minutes. In ten minutes the thermometer at the Weather Bureau showed a drop in temperature of 7-1-2 degrees.

From the Battery to Grand street gutters ran with water for the first time in many days. Only a few drops—scarcely enough to wet the sidewalks—fell in the Police Headquarters zone, while at Thirty-fourth street there was a smart downpour.
