All day while Josefina Terranova sat watching the work of choosing the twelve men who will try her for the murder of her uncle and aunt, a little eager Italian hung over a bench in the back of Justice Scott's courtroom today, never taking his eyes off the girl.

The little man was Giuseppe Terranova, husband of the prisoner. Yesterday he stayed away from the crowded chamber where the trial is taking place. But today he arrived betimes, bringing with him the wedding ring which he took from her on the night when he learned that she had been defiled by her uncle.

He believes she did right, that the girl for which he drove her from him was wiped out by her act. And she, cheered by the near presence of her husband, lost some of the stolid dullness which had made her seem so stupid and sleepy, so like a talking doll, and brightened perceptibly, smiling as she talked with her lawyers and flashing pretty in her checks.

She watched carefully every teleman called and only those she approved were accepted. Every one is married, all but one have daughters. She explained their selection to an Evening World reporter when she said before the case began this morning:

"I am glad it is soon to be over. The men who are to set me free are the men whom I have known since I was only a child. I want only men who have daughters to try me. They will understand. Men who have no children have no hearts. I will not have them.

As Josefina Terranova walked into the court she turned her head to the right and looked at her counsel, Judge Jean Palmieri. He told her whose Guinepess would be sitting. They were men, big men and brown and plaid like those of a deer; his small and pale, typical of the south of Italy.

Their glances crossed only for a moment, but when the girl-ride who stabbed her aunt and uncle to death took her seat she was smiling happily and a bright flash burned pink in her olive cheeks.

Terranova has been summoned as a witness for the State—why, he does not know. His heart is all with his wife in this struggle of hers with the form of law. When he came to the Criminal Courts Building this morning answering the summons under the name of Joseph Terranova, he was halted in the corridor by Detective-Sergeant Joe Pirogino and another Italian detective. These began to question him regarding his knowledge of the crime.

When the girl's counsel saw them and hurried up to the group, the detectives moved away. To a reporter Terranova said:

"I cannot tell you why they seek to force me to bear witness against my wife. My sympathy is for her lawyer and she is more sinned against than sinning. And she is my wife and I love her.

"She did right to kill those two. It was what she should have done—what I would want my wife to do, if she deserved death. I am glad that they are dead and that they died as they did.

"They say I have not come to Josefina's aid, that I have paid her lawyer no money to defend her. All my money I spent in fitting up our flat and buying her wedding gown, for she must be married in. I have no money left now, but I have kept our home and it is waiting for her when she is freed."

Save for a pair of black silk gloves, Josefina Terranova wore the same dress as yesterday—the crudely cut little gray suit and the show of cheap jewelry, with the tiny gold ring on her breast. Again she sat alone in Naa Patterson's old chair, with no company at the long table, her lawyer and his clerk. Her mother, Mrs. Pollaro, was so feeble to leave her bed. The husband, with his mother, stayed at the rear of the long room. In the audience were many Italians, mostly men.

Few Woman Spectators. Yesterday there were no women spectators. Today there were four plain.

TWO FALL FROM BALLOON INTO HUDSON RIVER

Leo Stevens and Tracey Tisdell Thrown Against the Palisades. ARE QUICKLY RESCUED. "Accident" Planned to Give Moving-Picture Enterprise a Chance.

Leo Stevens and Tracey Tisdell, two aeronauts, were today spilled out of a balloon over the Hudson River off Grey-stone. Fishermen in boats went hastily to their rescue and pulled the aeronauts out of danger.

The ascent was made from the Union Gas Works, Fort Morris, Bronx, at 11:15 yesterday afternoon. The affair was veiled with secrecy to make it more attractive. It took two hours to fill the bag with 17,000 cubic feet of gas, and then Leo Stevens and Tisdell, whose identity was concealed under the title "a member of the Aero Club," waved farewell to a crowd of Bronxites. The crowd contained many of the people who had watched Paul Noquet start on his trip to death, and many believed that something would come of this trip.

Getting Into Difficulty. The balloon was carried to the north-west by a stiff breeze. Within the hour it was a mere speck on the landscape. As soon as it cast off Dr. Johann P. Thomas, the aeronaut-physician, dashed off in pursuit in his automobile with Mrs. Stevens and his other. The balloon went up the Hudson, and when it arrived opposite Grey-stone spectators on the shore could see that it appeared to become unmanageable.

The balloon was dashed against the Palisades and as it was crashed against the rocks the two occupants were hurled into space. Stevens and Tisdell dropped straight into the river. Boats rowed by fishermen swarmed to their assistance.

The Thomas automobile with Mrs. Stevens and party saw the "accident" and took a launch to the place. The balloon was a wreck.

BY BOZEMAN BULGER. (Special to The Evening World.) CINCINNATI, May 15.—Notwithstanding his connection with the Cincinnati Club, Garry Hermann, Chairman of the National Commission, has taken exception to the suspension of Dan McGann on complaint of Umpire Johnstone. He has written to Harry Pulliam, President of the National League, telling him he thinks the action unjust.

McGann said nothing that could not be heard by the spectators, said Hermann, "and I think the punishment too severe. Just what effect this letter will have on the case is not yet known."

In the meantime McGann is occupying a comfortable seat in the grandstand this afternoon, incognito. The Giants were anxious for this afternoon's game, as it meant a good lead over tacking Pittsburgh and Chicago. The club leaves to-night at 8 o'clock for Pittsburgh. The team is now in excellent shape for a strenuous campaign, and their ginger during practice this afternoon was applauded by local fans.

Belmont Never Bets. Mr. Belmont is declared to be heartily in favor of the plan, saying: "I never dreamed and communication with the grounds is tied up."

GIULIENI'S MUSTARD. Sold by Grocers and Delicatessen Stores.

The Piano Factory and Warehouse of Frederick Doll & Co., at Thirtieth Street Blazes Up and Four Alarms Are Sent In.

BLAZE JUMPS ACROSS STREET AND GUTS LUMBER YARD.

Seven Ambulances Called to Be in Readiness if Needed—Flats and Tenements in the Vicinity Are Hastily Cleared of Tenants.

A big fire which spread a pall of smoke over the east side started late this afternoon in Frederick Doll's piano factory, No. 406 East Thirtieth street. The inflammable material—varnishes, woods and oils—proved fat for the flames, which spread with lightning rapidity through the building.

Three alarms were sent in from Thirtieth street and First avenue almost simultaneously, calling out a formidable array of apparatus. The fire went through the factory with great swiftness, little explosions of varnish throwing the fire to all parts of the plant. With gathering energy the flames roared through the building and burst out of the roof in a lofty yellow pennant that could be plainly seen many blocks away.

Hundreds of planes were looked up by which the panic-stricken workers had the quick rush of the fire, and the rapidly assembling fire companies found that they could not save the factory's contents and confined their efforts to saving the adjoining buildings, from which the flames leaped First avenue from the piano factory at the southwest corner and fired the lumber piles in Doherty's and Carroll's lumber yards.

The corner was a seething mass of flame within five minutes. Seven ambulances were in waiting for expected victims and the police ordered every one from the block.

The tenements adjoining the factory on First avenue were promptly cleared and deserted.

It looked when this edition of The Evening World was sent to press as if two city blocks would be demolished by the flames. Eyes were hurried up the river and helped in the work of staying the spread of the fire by wetting down buildings near the water front.

It was estimated that 25,000 persons choked the blocks in the neighborhood. The fourth alarm was sent in when the flames leaped First avenue from the piano factory at the southwest corner and fired the lumber piles in Doherty's and Carroll's lumber yards.
