HUGHES IS FAVORED BY ROOSEVELT; GOV. HIGGINS REFUSES TO RUN AGAIN

POLICE FIND BUTCHER KNIFE USED BY GULDENSUPPE SLAYER

Oil Cloth Cover in Which Body Was Wrapped Traced by Evening World Reporter to Dealer Who Sold It

The knife with which it is believed the victim of the new Guildenuppe murder was killed and with which his body was dismembered, was found today under a board about fifty feet southeast of the excavation in which the trunk of the body was found, at Thirty-sixth street and Eleventh avenue.

It is what is known as a butcher's dressing knife, and partly supports the police theory that the hand which dismembered the corpse was experienced in butchering.

The blade had been recently cleaned. On the handle were blood stains. The knife had been placed under the board since Saturday evening, as it rained Saturday, and had it been there before then it would be rusty.

OILCLOTH COVER IS TRACED.

The oilcloth sash covering about the torso of the dismembered human body was probably one of several sold by A. Neurick in his small dry goods store at No. 508 Tenth avenue, an Evening World reporter discovered today.

Neurick and his wife say that they have sold many of these oilcloth squares bearing the print of Columbus discovering America, but that they will be able to identify all of the purchases if they are found by the police.

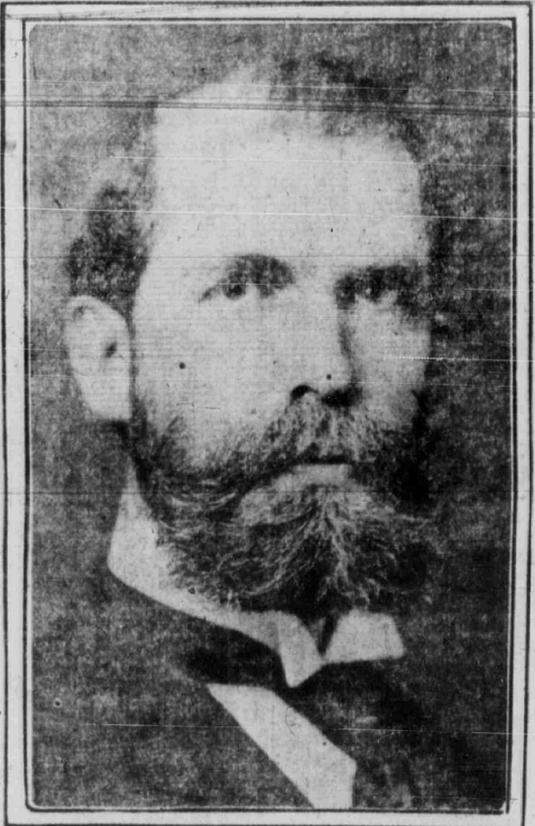

The oilcloth with the Columbus picture has been a favorite with Italian families," said Mrs. Neurick today. "We have sold lots of them to Italian families in this neighborhood.

Mrs. Adolph Droid, of No. 310 Tenth avenue, keeper of a general store, says that she sold two oil cloths of a "Landing of Columbus" pattern to two men about two weeks ago.

The police this afternoon came to the conclusion that the victim of the second Guildenuppe murder had been murdered while he slept in his own home, that his home was of several rooms and that there was undoubtedly a woman in the house.

After being killed the body was dismembered, according to the police theory, and then the torso was wrapped in the oilcloth covering which was
