

SUGAR TRUST IS PLACED ON TRIAL FOR REBATING

First of Many Indictments Is Taken Up in the Federal Court.

BIG ARRAY OF LAWYERS.

Parsons, Choate and Parker Among Those Looking After the Trust.

The trial of the American Sugar Refining Company of New York, indicted for having violated the Elkins Act in accepting rebates from the New York Central Railroad in the spring of 1903, amounting to $25,000, was begun to-day before a jury and Judge Holt in the United States Federal Court.

For giving the rebates the New York Central Railroad Company was convicted in the same court yesterday. It had been convicted before on a similar charge and fined $100,000.

Generally speaking, it is believed the present indictment against the trust is the least important of the many against it. It charges that the defendant accepted $25,000 in rebates a few months after the passage of the Elkins act, the shipments having been made, however, several months prior to the enactment of the law.

LABOR IS SCARCE ON PANAMA CANAL.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Scarcity of labor on the canal zone has hindered the progress of work on the canal, according to a report by Chief Engineer Stevens. The report says:

"There has been a marked falling off in the number of laborers this month, and it has been greater in the department of trucks and dumps, where we have a greater need for men. Towards the last part of the month the first contingent of Gallegos from Spain reached here."

"We could, conservatively, use now in the neighborhood of 2,000 more men between points on this division and our dumping grounds. Our daily average for September, including every department on the entire division, was 2,267 men."

MAKES STORY IN PHOTOS

Kodak Has Become a Part of the Equipment in Many of Our Homes.

BY DR. J. K. DIXON

Well Known Globe Trotter and Lecturer at the Kodak Exhibition. Less than a generation ago we took our children at intervals of from one to five years on a painful pilgrimage to the photographer's. Having saved our dime for a month or protracted were duly polished and best-sub-and-luckered and journeyed to the queer place of mysteries where the roof was all windows. There they had 1970 tons of plates on their heads. There they sat and sat, nor dared to move, for what seemed hours, while the shiny gentlemen told them to watch for the little bird-see.

To-day, when the kodak is as much a part of a home's equipment as the piano, the photographic histories of our families are very different. A series of self-leather-bound albums—not a bit, however, like the bulky photographic albums of our grandfathers—contain a stated series of prints for each member of the family. Each print has been snapped in familiar surroundings made dear by association. Each portrait was taken offhand when some well-loved and characteristic expression or attitude was unconsciously assumed.

All Give Pleasure. They may not all be perfect photographs, but they are perfect records of the growth. And at five years of age you have more than five hundred records of him. Each little dress and each pair of shoes, his first trousers, his first knife and his first watch, his Christmas cards and his holiday letters, his first memories of childhood. This might be called the domestic album, and its contents are so valuable and so interesting that it is well worth the trouble of photographing against the stigma of childhood.

Domestic photography has been given a prominent place in the Kodak exhibition now being held in the Concert Hall of Madison Square Garden. Many of the most beautiful and interesting photographs on display are those which call attention to the new bromide paper law camera. The results are remarkable—real pictures cut right out of life. They are so realistic, so simple, and so true that they would ornament the richest salon.

The improved process. Such photographs illustrate the improved processes of making enlargements. Every amateur who has an enlarging camera, but the enlarging of photographs on the new bromide paper law camera developed to such an extent of detail that splendid enlargements made direct from your small film negative may now be bought for a comparatively small price.

So that here is another goal for the amateur to work toward. He can make his enlarging in a not too long time, and the enlargements added to from time to time will be unique, handsome and valuable. This is a new idea to the majority of us, and it is going to be the next striking development in the wonderful growth and spread of popular photography.

COURT INSPECTS THE VOID BALLOTS

Work of Election Officials Found Properly Done in Most Cases.

THE BIG JOB OF JUDICIALLY INSPECTING and passing upon the void and protested ballots in Manhattan and the Bronx was to-day begun by Justice Dowling in the Supreme Court.

The work will be made easier than that done last year, the inspectors of election in nearly every election district having properly indorsed on the backs of the ballots in the envelope whether it was declared a void ballot and not counted, or had been declared a legal ballot and counted over the protest of the watchers.

The lawyers were W. H. Williams for the Republicans; D. F. Cohan, Robert Lewis and John H. Dowling for Tammany Hall, and Edgar Hirschberg and Charles A. Dana for the Supreme Court.

The third election district had returned twelve void and eleven protested ballots, but the lawyers had little difficulty in agreeing upon them. As it ran through the day the few cases in which the election officials overruled not making a material change in the result.

The decision of the Diocesan Court was made last April and Dr. Crapsey was suspended, but he appealed to the higher court and got a stay of sentence. Miss Louise Havens, sixty-nine years old, was found dead in her rooms at No. 5 Putnam avenue, Brooklyn, to-day, with her throat cut. Poor health had made her melancholy, but her suicide was a shock to her friends. She owned the house in which she lived alone on the upper floor, renting the two lower floors. She was heard moving about early this morning, but when the postman called he failed to get any response. The tenants summoned Mrs. and had the door forced.
