

CASSIE CHADWICK STRICKEN BLIND AND NEAR DEATH

Witch of Finance Suddenly Collapsed From an Attack of Neuralgia of the Heart While Enjoying Visit From Her Son.

(Special to The Evening World.) COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 16.—Cassie Chadwick, the witch of finance, who swindled Eastern capitalists out of millions and broke several Ohio banks, is totally blind and may not recover from an attack of illness that overcame her yesterday.

The second year of her imprisonment was completed yesterday, and at her request she was allowed to invite her son Emil to visit her. Mrs. Chadwick and the young man were seated together in the reception room of the women's department of the prison, when she suddenly dropped unconscious from her chair.

Young Chadwick called for help and attendants carried the woman to a prison hospital, where she was immediately taken in charge by Dr. Garrett. He found her condition so precarious that he sent to Columbus for other physicians and they worked over her three hours before they could arouse her to consciousness.

It was then discovered that she was totally blind. The optic nerves were affected by the sudden stroke. She was in bad physical health when admitted to the prison two years ago and the regular life and healthful food and exercise she was forced to take had apparently been beneficial.

Another attack will doubtless result fatally. Her heart is very weak, and this fact complicates the situation. Cassie Chadwick is the most remarkable woman criminal of modern times. Although not attractive physically, she was so well acquainted with human nature that she handled men as she would handle the pawns in a game of chess.

Modern financial methods, which she had shown knowledge, enabled her to swindle bankers and business men who were supposed, in their own communities, to be monuments of wisdom and conservatism.

As a young woman she was a fortune teller in a Western town, and as a fortune teller she was a fortune teller. She was a fortune teller in a Western town, and as a fortune teller she was a fortune teller.

Through legitimate financial transactions Mrs. Chadwick became well acquainted with financiers in Cleveland. To these men she managed to convey the impression that she was the illegitimate daughter of Andrew Carnegie.

She was a fortune teller in a Western town, and as a fortune teller she was a fortune teller. She was a fortune teller in a Western town, and as a fortune teller she was a fortune teller.

Among her dupes was Mr. Reynolds, the secretary and treasurer of one of the banks in Cleveland. She was a fortune teller in a Western town, and as a fortune teller she was a fortune teller.

FAILS TO GET LOAN, WRECKS A SALOON

Thomas F. Duffy Smashes Every Bottle and Mirror in the Place.

Because Lawrence Shanley, a bartender for Fred Thorn, owner of Thorn's Hotel, Westchester avenue and Main street, the Bronx, would only give Thomas F. Duffy fifty cents when he was asked for the loan to buy a bottle of whisky in the place.

He continued his wave of destruction by smashing two large plate glass mirrors. Then he barricaded himself in the saloon and hurled broken glass at an officer who tried to arrest him.

Duffy and Shanley are old acquaintances. Shanley only had a few cents after spending his Sunday at Coney Island, but gave Duffy all he had. Duffy was dismissed.

He then opened his bombardment of the place by heaving a quart bottle of whisky at Shanley. The liquor missed aim and hit the mirror, smashing it into a thousand pieces.

Shanley managed to flee with his skin intact after landing two or three slight blows on his frenzied friend. He called the police, and Patrolman Alex J. Stewart hurried down on a bicycle. He had just dismounted, when Duffy, Shanley and the bartender, out looking with broadsides of pop bottles and flasks.

By artful ducking and because Duffy could not find anything else to throw, Stewart made his way near enough to land his fist over the eye of the wrecker. The blow had the proper effect and Duffy was taken down for the count. He was taken to the hospital. He will face charges of wrecking the saloon, assaulting the bartender and resisting an officer when released.

Duffy was held in $1,000 bail until Sept. 21 on a charge of assault.
