

CROWD OF BOYS WITH WESTON ON FINAL 4-MILE WALK

Aged Pedestrian Concludes His Two Weeks' Engagement with Evening World, Which Originated Movement.

Weston's Ideas Announced in The Evening World.

For two weeks Edward Payson Weston, the veteran pedestrian, has been writing articles on walking for The Evening World, and has given everybody some valuable hints on how to care for themselves while taking outdoor exercise. He has advanced the following ideas:

Before beginning walking as an exercise the feet should be well cared for in advance. They should be bathed in a solution of rock salt and water every night. When they have been dried the feet should be rinsed with a half-and-half solution of alcohol and water.

The fingers often become numb while walking. To avoid this the pedestrian should carry a small cane or a riding crop and twirl it in his fingers. That will prevent such a feeling.

No boy should walk fifty miles until he is over twenty-three years of age. The severe strain on the system is liable to retard his growth.

Avoid high-heeled shoes and be careful to see that the ones you use have a broad toe and a very heavy sole. Light shoes will not last long if your walks go over five or six miles.

Immediately after arising in the morning take a couple of glasses of water fresh from the hydrant, but do not use ice.

If you find that corns or blisters grow on your feet continue the salt water baths, using them in the morning and at night.

Carry your overcoat on your arm while walking and then put it on when you have finished. This will prevent colds.

One of the best methods of getting rid of a severe cold or cough is to walk it off. Go until you have got up a sweat, and the cold will work itself out of the pores and disappear.

I find that a red flannel night gown is a great thing for keeping off rheumatism or colds. I use one all the time while on long walks, and in the winter whether I am walking or not.

By taking a crowd of rollicking boys on a four mile jaunt part of the way around Central Park yesterday afternoon, Edward Payson Weston concluded his engagement with The Evening World, which has led in this movement to improve the physical health of the people of New York.

That the idea attracted general public interest is attested by the fact that other papers have followed in the lead of The Evening World and engaged the aged pedestrian to continue the work with the boys.

On the opening afternoon of the daily walks fully two thousand boys rallied around the old pedestrian, and it was a shouting crowd that followed him to the end of the jaunt. Naturally a large part of this crowd followed him for the mere purpose of gratifying their curiosity. They were all anxious to see the man who walked from Portland, Me., to Chicago in twenty-four days, and The Evening World is pleased to have that afforded them the chance. The second day brought with it a heavy downpour of rain and the walk had to be postponed through fear of colds and coughs that were likely to follow drenched clothing.

On the third day, as hundreds had already gratified their curiosity, the crowd had dwindled to about 400, but that was made up of boys and men who were serious in their determination to be benefited by the opportunity afforded them through The Evening World. On the last day of the engagement at the end of the walk the jaunt and gave a prolonged cheer for The Evening World and for Mr. Weston. Mr. Weston was engaged by The Evening World for a period of two weeks, but when that time had expired The Evening World arranged for an extra day's walk at its expense, and that concluded the experiment.

As was said before the experiment was a great success and The Evening World is glad that it had the forethought to see possibilities for the future of the boys of New York in such a movement and carried it forward to such a successful conclusion that others, lacking in originality or forethought, have seen fit to follow its leadership.
