

HAND OUT OF THE THEATRES

Davis Returned the Lost Pug and Didn't Get Any Thanks Either.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS awoke a few mornings ago with a terrible toothache. "My whole jaw is jumping out of my head," he telephoned to his dentist. "I'll come right around."

"Nothing doing," said the dentist. "All my time for to-day is arranged for."

"But you must," insisted Davis. "I'm dying by inches."

"You'll have to die then," cheerily quoth the tooth doctor. "Do you think I can give somebody else's time to you?"

"Exactly what you've got to do," said Davis. "I'll start right away because Miss Eleanor Robson and a whole lot of actors will be waiting for me to go and rehearse 'em at 11 o'clock." And the upshot was that the dentist gave the author the time of a woman who was coming all the way from Jersey, and Davis started down Fifth avenue.

He hadn't gone very far when he met the jolliest little Boston bulldog he ever saw—plainly lost and looking for his master. A policeman almost had the pup when Davis reached out and picked up the crook in his walking stick in its collar.

"Yes, he's mine," he told the policeman. "I know I ought to have a leash, but I'm going to catch a cab. And then to make good he got in a taxicab. "I'll take you home," he said to the dog upon whose collar he read "Jack Cook, Navarro Apts., West Fifty-eighth street."

Neither he went, only to be told that Mr. Cook had moved to the Chapel, in West Thirty-first street. And when the taxicab had taken author, dog and toothache down there, no trace could be found of Mr. Cook. Back to the Navarro they journeyed, and this time the telephone girl recommended him to the janitor's wife in Fifty-sixth street, and she said Mr. Cook was living in East Thirty-first street. Once again the taxicab turned and the address given proved to be just what Davis needed. A slighted, pup under his arm, and two scrubwomen and a janitor fell upon his neck.

"Sure, ye've brought Jack home," they exclaimed delightedly. "Won't Mister Cook be glad?"

"Take me to Mr. Cook," said Davis.

"The th' Rivind Mister Cook," said one of the scrubwomen graciously. "Come this way." And through one church, two reading rooms of a mission and the library of the rectory they conducted him to a study where the Rev. Mr. Cook—that isn't really his name—sat.

"Oh, look, he's brought Jack home," chorused the scrubwomen and the janitor, while Jack meekly wagged his crooked tail. But the Rev. Mr. Cook fixed Davis with a searching gaze.

"Where did you get that dog?" he inquired sternly.

"Why, I'm returning him to you," said Davis. "I've had no end of trouble finding you in a taxicab and all that sort of thing, and I've a beastly toothache and—"

"I say, where did you get that dog, young man?" repeated the stern Mr. Cook. "Are you sure you are not bringing him home for a reward?"

"If you must know, I picked him up near the Waldorf," answered the author, as he started angrily for the door. "But I will say that I've missed an appointment with my dentist and a rehearsal, and I've still got the toothache and—"

"I beg your pardon, I was rude," put in the dominie, "but, my dear sir, I've tried five times to lose that dog, and now you bring him back to me again like a bad penny."

Light has been thrown on the cause of the Gluck's recent defeat. In a late issue of the London Sketch there is a set of photographs of "young Newporters indulging in baseball while dressed as women," and in the descriptive paragraph it is stated that Miss Alexandra Carlisle in the "Mollusc," has "taken up baseball."

"Miss Carlisle, who is making a big success in America," the sketch naively relates, "is a member of the New York Giants team."

BOY SHOT IN BACK PUZZLE TO POLICE

Quinn Accuses Jewelry Agent, Who Tells a Much Different Story.

The Brooklyn police are puzzled over the shooting of Frank Quinn, seventeen years old, who is in the Brooklyn Hospital with a painful wound in his back.

Quinn, after getting wet delivering coal in the rain yesterday, went to a cellar at No. 156 High street, Brooklyn, where Thomas Neary, for whom he worked, has his headquarters. He told the police he was preparing to change his clothes when Antonio Mangieri, a jewelry agent, occupying the house, came down and began to threaten him, at the same time pointing a pistol at him.

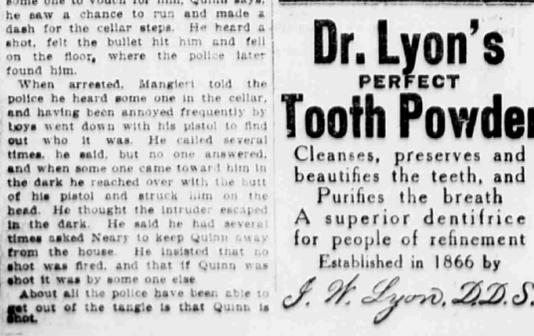

After begging Mangieri to send for some one to vouch for him, Quinn says, he saw a chance to run and made a dash for the cellar steps. He heard a shot, felt the bullet hit him and fell on the floor, where the police later found him.

When arrested, Mangieri told the police he heard some one in the cellar, and having been annoyed frequently by boys went down with his pistol to find out who it was. He called several times, he said, but no one answered, and when some one came toward him in the dark he reached over with the butt of his pistol and struck him on the head. He thought the intruder escaped in the dark. He said he had several times asked Neary to keep Quinn away from the house. He insisted that no shot was fired, and that if Quinn was shot it was by some one else.

About all the police have been able to get out of the tangle is that Quinn is

SCORES UTILITY BOARD BUT VOTES TO GIVE $150,000

Metz, at Estimate Hearing Leads in Attack on Public Service Commission.

Every member of the Board of Estimate, including the Mayor, whacked the Public Service Commission to-day. The Comptroller was particularly severe. He openly declared that, since its existence, all the commission has succeeded in doing was to "revise a few old blue prints of plans of the old rapid transit board and to force the street railways to cut off transfers."

The occasion for "sailing into" the commission was the consideration of the revenue bonds for the expenses and compensation of the employees of the commission during the year ending Dec. 31 next. This money is wanted on account of requisition for an appropriation of $1,095,000 which the city is to pay for the Public Service Commission luxury.

"I regret to see quoted in a political speech printed in the newspapers to-day," began Comptroller Metz, "that this board is charged with hampering the operations of the Public Service Commission. If acquiescing in much that the commission wanted, if appro-
