

Who Wants a Husband Who Marries to Escape Paying a Bachelor Tax?

A Woman Would Know Beforehand How Generous He Would Be, Says Mrs. Hasbrouck, Author and Clubwoman.

Law Taxing Unmarried Men Insulting and Unjust, She Asserts—What Is Needed Is Law to Make Marriage More Difficult.

By Ethel Lloyd Patterson.

MRS. LILLIAN HASBROUCK.

There are the sentiments of Mrs. Lillian Hasbrouck concerning a recently adopted ordinance which has drawn the eyes of the world to the West.

A canvass of New York's Aldermen revealed that of eight unmarried members of the board three were in favor of a bachelor tax and five against it.

Five married Aldermen agreed as one man that such an ordinance would be desirable in this city.

But why would such a tax be unfair? I asked her.

Tax Would Be Unfair.

"To tax bachelors would be, of course, in a much smaller degree—but it would be just as unfair as not permitting women to vote," replied Mrs. Hasbrouck.

"What we really need are laws to make marriage more difficult and to reduce the birth rate; not laws to force people into marriage who would rather not be married, and so increase the population of the world by bringing into it would know beforehand about how generous he would be likely to be.

"If a man was not willing to pay a few dollars to live his life the way he wished to, do you think after he was married he would be willing to pay a few more to help his wife live her's the way she wished to?"

"The trouble with us, anyway," continued Mrs. Hasbrouck, "is that we have too many laws dealing with marriage. We have so many we do not obey any of them.

Should Make Marriage Difficult.

"What we really need are laws to make marriage more difficult and to reduce the birth rate; not laws to force people into marriage who would rather not be married, and so increase the population of the world by bringing into it
