

"S'Matter, Pop?"

By C. M. Payne

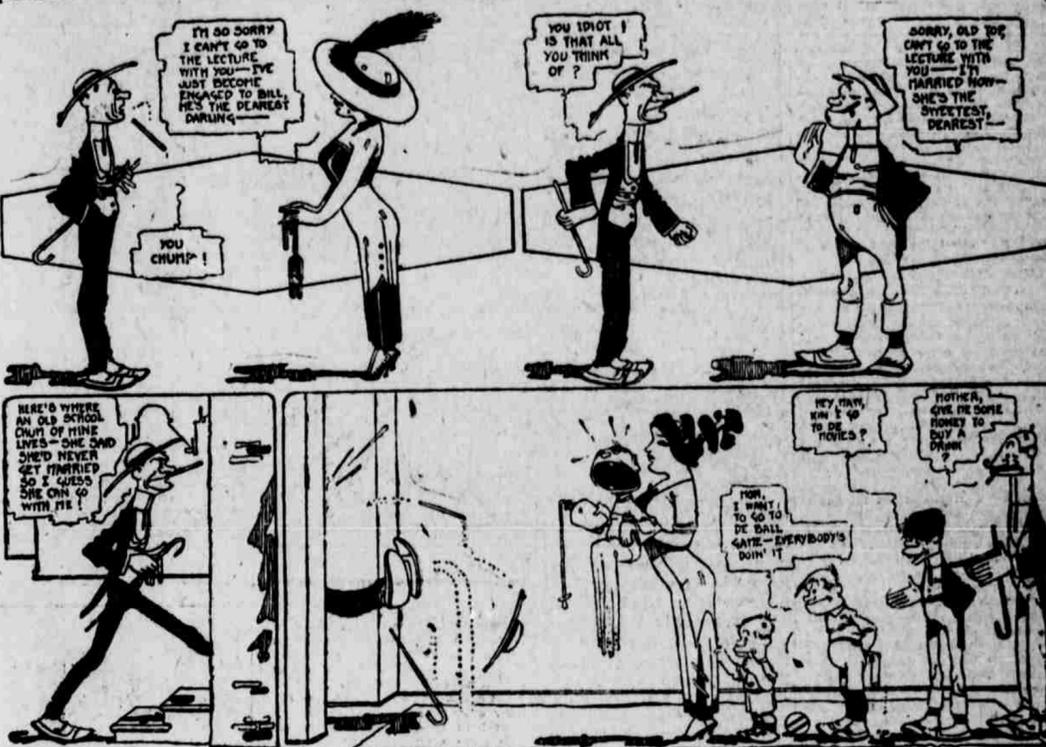

Them Was the Happy Days

By Dwig

"Everybody's Doing It!"

By Carmichael

Darktown Doings

"My husband and I are very incompatible!"
 "On what subject do you disagree?"
 "Well, he doesn't believe in debt!"

The Kind of Man for Me

By Eleanor Schorer

Next she met the College Professor. He didn't care for good looks. He said so himself. The contents of a head were more interesting to him than its exterior. He admired brains, not beauty. So Bessie tried to cultivate her brain. She studied all sorts of horrid dry subjects. And she grew thin.

girls of her age, especially those out of school, have young men friends.
 "H. A." writes: "It is proper for a young lady who is not in love but merely on friendly terms with a young man to telephone him nearly every day at his place of business."
 "C. T." writes: "When a man is with two ladies, does he walk on the outside or between them?"
 "C. M." writes: "I stopped speaking to a young man seven months ago because I thought he seemed cool. I often see him and I want to be friends again. How shall I bring this about?"
 "The man should always walk on the side next to the street."
 "I should think the simplest way was just to bow and smile the next time you meet."

Silhouette Sayings

"Say, Pa, is a magnate a man wot can make lots of money?"
 "No, son. A magnate is a man that can owe lots of money!"

Betty Vincent's Advice to Lovers

A Point of Etiquette.
 "A. C." writes: "When a young man is introduced to a lady at a dance, what is the proper thing for him to say and do?"
 He naturally says that he is glad to meet her, and asks her for the first dance she has free.
 "M. Y." writes: "There is a young man who seems to care a good deal about me when we are alone, but who neglects me in the presence of others. Shall I continue my friendship with him?"
 I think your self-respect will not permit it, unless he mends his ways.
 "P. B." writes: "I brought a friend of mine to see my sister, and later she telephoned and asked permission to call on her. Because she was invited to a party that night she told him to come another time. Was she right?"
 Certainly, since she had a previous engagement for the date he mentioned.
 "E. L." writes: "I am going with a young man who declares his love for me, but we are not engaged. Am I right in allowing him to kiss me when he says good-night?"
 I think you should keep this privilege for the man you promise to marry.
 "L. K." writes: "I am engaged to a man, but will not receive the ring for six months. In the mean time haven't I the right to accept attentions from other men?"
 Not since you have given your promise to marry. The ring is of relative unimportance compared to the promise.
Difference in Age.
 "A. S." writes: "I am thirty-two and in love with a girl of nineteen. Do you think the disparity in our ages too great?"
 Not necessarily, if you are truly fond of each other.
 "E. L." writes: "Is it proper for a girl of sixteen, who is working, to allow young men to come and see her and bring her home from business?"
 I think she is rather young, but most

Two Feature Serial Stories in the EVENING WORLD

"Both Sides of the Shield," a Story of Love and War, written by Major Archibald Butt, Aide to President Taft; one of the heroes of the Titanic.

Begins May 9

"Officer 666," a rapidly moving story of New York life, based upon the successful farce of that title.

Begins May 13