$1,000,000 RAINS DOWN ON CROWD ALONG BROADWAY

Stock of Universal Film Manufacturing Co. Flung From Window.

TEN-POUND SEAL DROPS.

Firm's Books Follow as Row Among Directors Waxes Hot in Office.

A paltry million dollars' worth of yellow-backed stock certificates of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company fluttered down from a fourth story window of the building at No. 160 Broadway upon the heads of unsuspecting pedestrians below this afternoon.

Also a ten-pound great seal of the corporation came down, scarcely fluttering, and all of the books of the secretary and treasurer. A veritable shower of "movie" gold and iron it was.

The prodigality of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was not mentioned by a majority vote of the directors and stockholders, however. In fact, one of the stout young rows of the day was in progress in the directors' office on the corner, four floors above the street, and the scattering of the stock certificates, the books and the ponderous corporate seal were only incidental to and a climax of the riot which closed a meeting of the directors and stockholders, about forty in number.

As a result William H. Swanson, said to be the legally deposed secretary and vice-president of the concern; Burton Garrett, its assistant secretary; and Howard Thurston, the vaudeville magician, were haled before Magistrate Herbert in the West Side Court.

There had been a bitter fight for control among the directors and some of the stockholders. Carl Laemmle, of No. 47 Riverside Drive, the president of the film company, had encompassed the overthrow of Swanson and Garrett and appointed new officers to take their places.

At the meeting to-day the deposed officers refused to relinquish their positions, so it was said, and threw the books and stock certificates out the window to some of their sympathizers, who were waiting on the sidewalk.

Thurston was one who caught a book and hence, he, too, was arrested on the grand larceny charge. The Magistrate said he could not see that the charge against the three was warranted.

How Miss Davison Was Killed Trying to Stop the King's Horse

At the running of the great Derby at Epom Downs track, near London, thousands were packed about the great course and the interest in the famous race was intense. King George's horse, Anmer, ridden by Jockey H. Jones, was entered in the race.

The race started without incident, and the horses, in two bunches, were just swinging about Tattenham Corner when Emily Wilding Davison, a suffragette of the most radical sort, who had served more than one term in prison and had gone on "hunger strikes," suddenly ducked under the fence and ran onto the track and threw her arms in the face of the King's horse.

The horse's shoulder struck the woman a tremendous blow and she fell unconscious. The jockey was seriously hurt and the woman, never regaining consciousness until near the end, died three days afterward. She is alleged to have whispered, "Fight on until the end."

DOUGHERTY SWEARS HE WAS WARNED TO BEWARE OF BIG ENGINE

"For God's Sake, Look Out for Yourself," Carroll Told Him. "Harmon Got His Yesterday. The Brakes Are Not Holding."

RECORD BOOK SHOWS REPORT "BRAKES NO GOOD"

Engineer, at Throttle of Wrecked Locomotive, Will Rehearse Fatal Crash for Coroner in Cab.

(Special to The Evening World from a Staff Correspondent.)

STAMFORD, Conn., June 16.—Charles J. Dougherty, engineer of the second section of the Springfield Express of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad which rammed the first section here last Thursday, killing six and injuring twenty persons, charged at Coroner Phelan's inquest to-day that Engine Foreman John Francis Carroll knew before Dougherty took out engine No. 1338 that the locomotive was unfit for service.

"For God's sake, watch yourself," was Carroll's statement to him, Dougherty testified, when the foreman learned the young engineer was going to take out the fast express. "Harmon got his yesterday. The brakes are not holding. Watch the water glass, too; they're all out of order on these new cars."

MYSTERY WOMAN CONFESSES TWO CHURCH THEFTS

"Mrs. Randolph Fitzhugh," After Dismissing Lawyers, Admits Her Guilt.

Mrs. Randolph Fitzhugh, the "woman of mystery," this afternoon pleaded guilty to two indictments of grand larceny in the second degree. Not only did she admit the theft of the gold mean bag of Miss Fisk, but also confessed to stealing a diamond bracelet from Miss Irene Murray in the Church of the Transfiguration, on Twenty-ninth street, Nov. 19. She was remanded to the Tombs for sentence on Thursday.

When on trial before Judge Swann and a jury in General Sessions this morning, the woman had proclaimed her innocence, and threw herself on the mercy of the Court, when she discharged her lawyer, Abraham Levy, and his associates for their insistence that she take a plea of guilty.

Mrs. Fitzhugh was on trial for the alleged theft of a gold mean bag, the property of Miss Dorothy Fisk of Plainfield, N. J., daughter of Philip Fisk, banker. Miss Fisk testified on Friday that the mean bag, valued at $50, was stolen from her muff in St. Bartholomew's Church on Madison avenue Sunday, Feb. 12.

After considering the evidence given by the prosecution's witnesses, Mr. Levy to-day advised Mrs. Fitzhugh to enter a plea of guilty. She refused and grew indignant. She complained to Judge Swann and stated to him that she desired a substitution of counsel.

"I am not guilty of this charge," she told Judge Swann, with vehemence, "and despite what my lawyer says—that it is the best thing for me to do—I will not plead guilty, even if you promise not to send me to prison."

John H. G. Burns, 7 to 2, 7 to 3 and 7 to 10, second; Chemnitz, 108 (E. Schartz), 6 to 1, 2 to 2 and 4 to 3, second; Jessau Burns, 119 (H. Denner), 7 to 1, 5 to 2 and 6 to 5, third. Time, 1:15.45. Ralph Lloyd, Afterglow, Muff, Casual, Emma and Nimbus also ran.

30 BETTORS BARRED OR ARRESTED AT BASEBALL FIELDS

Professional Gamblers Taken in Custody at Philadelphia.

Through the concerted action of the baseball presidents, thirty men were arrested or barred from the grounds at Philadelphia and at the Polo Grounds to-day, because they were suspected of being professional gamblers. This was the beginning of a widespread campaign against the evils of baseball betting, it is believed. There has been much talk of the baseball promoters getting together to stamp out professional betting and bookmaking at baseball parks. To-day twenty-seven men were arrested in Philadelphia and three Boston gamblers who tried to get into the Polo Grounds were stopped.

It is well known that the professional gamblers make book regularly on the pennant race and important individual games. Great sums are wagered annually by the public, and much of the money is bet at the grounds with men who have smuggled in solely to make handbooks on the result.

The crusade was started by Ben Johnson, President of the American League, and both Frank Farrell, owner of the New York Americans, and Harry Hempstead, proprietor of the Giants, are known to be keenly interested in the fight against the gamblers.

Farrell had Detective Tom O'Neil stop the Boston trio at the Polo Grounds to-day. The barred men refused to give their names, but it was understood that they had come for the sole purpose of making a handbook on the series. Abe Atell, the boxer, was with them, but after some argument, convinced Farrell that he had no interest in the betting proposition and had come to see the game. He was admitted.

The complaint book in which Dougherty said he wrote "Brakes no good" was produced and the Coroner read from it the case on which Dougherty made his report. It read:

"T. M. H. & N. R.R., report of repairs needed to engine 1338, engine No. 1338, freight engine, train No. 1338, 4:54 P. M. date 5-15-1913."

Then followed a long list of similar parts, printed on the page, with space left for comment by the one making the complaint. Dougherty had made several entries requesting oil and adjustment of certain parts. Under the heading "Air Brakes," there was an entry, but under the caption "Work" there appeared his complaint: "Brakes no good."

Dougherty also had made an entry in compliance with the statement by engine No. 1338, that the water glass did not work.

The Dougherty whole report, read under the caption, "Road and Main," "back end runs warm." The runs were crossed out, but Dougherty said he had no done it. "Under the head 'Work,'" he wrote "examined under 'examined'." Under "driving bit" he wrote "oil." Under "spring" he wrote "examined." Under "rod" he wrote "examined." Under "rod" he wrote "examined." Under "rod" he wrote "examined."

Charles R. Dougherty, who drove No. 1338, a big Pacific type locomotive, was the first section of the Springfield Express last Thursday, killing six passengers and injuring a score, may repeat the fatal section of his run. Coroner John J. Phelan will ask the railroad authorities to handle the engine when the test is made to-morrow. Dougherty, though shaken by the accident, has agreed to make the test.

The engine and the same train of cars will be run down on the Stamford station from Glenbrook early on Thursday night. It is believed that the same signals will be set against him. He will apply the air brakes gradually at first and later in an emergency manner just as he did on Thursday and by the action of the train will depend largely whether Dougherty's explanation or that of the railroad, which accuses him of carelessness, will be accepted as the legal explanation of the wreck.

"I shall be in the engine on Thursday," said the Coroner at his home in Bridgeport this morning. Just before he left for New Haven to view the wrecked train, which is in the yard there, "I shall watch the engine."
