

WILD TROLLEY CAR HURLS TWELVE TO SERIOUS INJURY

Gates Break as Vehicle, Uncontrolled, Rushes Down Palisades Track.

A Public Service trolley, packed with one hundred and fifty passengers, sitting and standing, ran wild down the steep long hill from the top of the Palisades to Weehawken ferry today.

The car stayed on the tracks, but at the very last turn, approaching the ferry, the gates of the rear gate form, which had been closed, as usual, at the top of the hill-gave way under the weight of the people awaying help against them and broke.

Twelve passengers were flung headlong to the street and rolled and bumped, groaning and screaming after the car for thirty feet or more.

The motorman, who wore badge No. 1215, got control of the car half a block further on. With the passengers and the conductor, he ran back to the aid of the injured. Policeman McInerney, who had heard the yell of the falling passengers, took charge.

One young woman was found to be unconscious and in danger of her life. All the injured were taken to a saloon on Clifton avenue until an ambulance could come from North Hudson hospital and attend them.

The following is a list of the injured: Frank, Elizabeth, West New York; skull fractured, may die; at North Hudson Hospital.

Devo, Charles, No. 27 Fifth street, West New York; badly bruised; at North Hudson Hospital.

Wrenford, Wesley, N. J.; slight contusion of the brain; at North Hudson Hospital.

McComb, No. 614 Fisher avenue, North Bergen; head cut; at North Hudson Hospital.

Briggs, Ezra, No. 88 Boulevard East, Weehawken; left arm broken; home in an automobile.

The other passengers who were hurt were able to go to business or to their homes unassisted after their cuts and scratches had been bandaged.

HEARST MAY DROP LEAGUE AND FORM NEW RADICAL PARTY

If He Does Not, He Will Blue Pencil League's List of Candidates.

"What is Mr. Hearst going to do?" A reply to this perplexing problem of local politicians was made today by one of the founders of the Independence League, a lawyer who is probably the state's chief adviser in municipal affairs.

Delia Woodson from Mr. Hearst are expected before the meeting of the Vacancy Committee of the Independence League, Monday afternoon. The committee is made up of John J. Hopper, William J. Taylor and Arthur Lang.

The Independence League, the Evening World's informant declared, may be thrown overboard and a new radical party started. The fate of the League will hang in the balance until after Primary Day, Sept. 10, when Mr. Hearst may either found the new party or shake up the candidates so far picked by the League.

In the latter contingency the Hearst group may reliably be expected to:

(1) Support John Purroy Mitchell mildly, the League directing its broadsides against President McAneny and Comptroller Prendergast.

(2) Retire Candidates McEvoy and Colwell, the Independence League choosing for the two city places and substitute the names of candidates more likely to defeat McAneny and Prendergast.

(3) Support the balance of the County Fusion ticket where candidates are found who have either positive municipal ownership views or are not opposed to such theories.

"Mr. Hearst will not be a candidate League leader. He has neither the time nor the inclination for the Mayoralty. What he and every Independence League is most concerned about is that office seekers shall not break their solemn and signed pledges to the people with impunity. We elected McAneny and Prendergast on a city-owned, city-built and city-operated subway platform. They proved traitors. As for Gaynor, the voters will attend to him."

Evening World's and Welfare Association's City-Wide Series of Better Babies' Contests

Mothers Told When and How to Wean Baby By Expert in a Lecture at Greenwich House

Don't Put the Child on Whole Milk, Nor Can It Live on Barley Water Alone—It Should Receive a Mixture Containing Half Milk Which Has Been Properly Sweetened.

Mothers with babies in their arms and with two-year-olds clutching their skirts again took their way to Greenwich House, No. 26 Jones street, yesterday afternoon to hear the second in the course of lectures concerning the "Care of Children," arranged by Garrett Smith of the Babies' Welfare Association. These lectures are designed to give a special coaching to the hundreds of mothers who have entered their children in the recent breaking Better Babies' Contest organized by the Evening World and Greenwich House.

Having carried his audience along in a previous talk from the baby's birth until the ninth month, the eminent child specialist who is giving the lectures told how to take care of baby after he can be nursed no longer.

"A child should be weaned at the age of nine or ten months," he said. "No mother should nurse her baby eighteen or twenty months. When the mother stops nursing the child it cannot be put immediately on whole milk, nor can it live on barley water alone. It should receive a mixture, containing from one-half to one-third milk which has been properly sweetened.

"Some mothers think that sugar is put in the milk to make it sweet so that the baby will like it. That is not the reason at all. The sugar is used in order to make the milk preparation as sweet as the milk as possible."

Mothers' milk has in it twice as much sugar as cow's milk. Mothers as a rule use milk sugar in preparing the milk formula. That is expensive, often costing as much as 50 cents a pound. Granulated sugar will do just as well for the majority of children. It is not necessary to use milk sugar unless the child is ill.

SHE DIDN'T KNOW HOW TO WEAN HER BABY.

"What did you give your child when you weaned?" the specialist broke off, looking at one woman in the audience.

"My baby was a year old and I put it on malted milk," she replied.

"Now here's a mother who gave her baby malted milk because she didn't know any better!" he exclaimed. "I'm not blaming you," he quickly reassured her. "You did what you thought was right. But you paid 50 cents every three or four days when you might just as well have used natural milk at the cost of 7 or 8 cents a day. The babies fed on patent foods do grow fat, but they are pale and not healthy. The excess of sugar in their food makes them fat, but, as I told you the other day, these are the first babies to fall victims to contagious diseases."

"When the child is weaned it should be taught to drink from a cup. After it learns, the baby takes milk better this way and digests it more easily. The child that drinks from a cup is less likely to wake up in the night, and it also learns to take other foods more easily."

"Some mothers think that every child has to have measles and whooping cough. That's nonsense. Quantities of children escape these and other contagious diseases. No child must have them. You put one or two children on a desert island and they'll grow up without suffering from the childish epidemics. A baby has measles because it catches them from another baby."

"A mother recently came to me," the specialist suddenly switched off, "and told me that she was going to visit her sister in the country. She said her sister's husband lived on a farm and kept one cow. After questioning her about conditions, I told her I feared she would get milk less good than what she could procure here in the city. Farmers take better care of what they sell than of what they use."

LIME WATER IN MILK AIDS THE DIGESTION.

"Lime water put in the baby's milk will keep it from vomiting. That is because lime water is alkaline and it takes a way the acidity of cow's milk, breaking up the curd and making it easier to digest. All children don't need lime water, however."

"Some doctors make the mistake of giving elaborate food formulas which nobody can understand. One of the ingredients they prescribe is cream. Now, cream is expensive, and until a baby is three years old it will do as well on milk. The best thing to give it is a simple milk mixture, one-third, one-half or two-thirds milk with barley water, and for every twenty-ounce mixture one ounce of granulated sugar. One ounce is two tablespoonsfuls."

"The child gaining in weight isn't going hungry. Another sign that it is getting enough to eat is when it becomes quiet and goes to sleep immediately after feeding. The satisfied child won't nurse more than fifteen minutes. If it isn't satisfied it will howl at the end of that time and try to nurse thirty-five or forty minutes. If you decide to increase your child's food, do it gradually."

"Some mothers say they can't work and nurse their babies. But in Hungary I went through a cigar factory, owned by the state, where from 600 to

ENDED LIFE WITH GAS AMID MISSIVES FROM GIRLS IN MANY PORTS

Thomas Blake, Cornish Sailor, Found Dying by Roommate—Help Came Too Late.

Thomas Blake, a Cornish sailor, was known to his intimates as "a tar with a girl in every port," and this reputation was borne out by the numerous postal cards and letters from women of many nationalities in all parts of the world, found to-day in the room at No. 24 Sixth street, where he committed suicide by inhaling gas.

Blake had had the room for six years, according to Mrs. Emma Molnerney, who conducts the hobbs. He paid for it even when away on long voyages, she said. Beyond the fact that he was a Cornishman and a widower, little was known of his history.

Early to-day Arthur Cole, who occupied the room with the Cornishman, returned home. He found Blake stretched across the bed, dressed, except for his shoes. A black cloth was tied about his face and under this was stuck the end of a reading lamp tube, connected with the open gas jet.

Cole summoned Policemen Brown and Daily, who called Dr. Quaglia from Plover Hospital, and Fred Weissinger came with a putmotor from the Consolidated Gas Company's office at Sixty-sixth street and West End avenue. The putmotor was used, but the doctor said help had come to the suicide about ten minutes too late.

Blake left no note, and friends in the house said they knew of no reason for his wishing to die.
