Women Besiege President; He Reiterates States Must Decide Question of Votes

200 Suffragists Force Wilson to Appear Before Them at Waldorf—He Declines to Answer Questions.

Two hundred members of the Women's Congressional Union for Women Suffrage refused to leave the Waldorf-Astoria this morning when President Wilson declined to meet them to discuss woman suffrage, and after a two-hour siege finally induced the President to meet them.

He assured them his mind was unchanged, that he is still of the opinion that suffrage must be determined by the States. He declined to answer questions which followed his speech with the statement that he did not want to argue the matter.

When the women first arrived at the hotel Secretary Tumulty had explained to them that the President had not made any definite appointment to meet them, and being busy with his speeches and certain matters of state he could not see them.

When the President finally decided to hear the women he sent word by one of the secretaries and the announcement was received with enthusiasm. Mr. Wilson was warmly greeted and he shook hands with Mrs. Henry Heister, Mrs. Amos Pinchot and several others.

In brief addresses Mrs. Heister and Mrs. Charles Heard asked the President's support of the amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for suffrage. When they concluded Mrs. Tiffany Dyer introduced the President. In a few words he apologized for having kept the women waiting and then explained his position.

WILSON'S SPEECH TO THE WOMEN WHO WANT VOTES. "I did not understand an appointment had been made," the President said, "and with so much to do here I thought I might not find time to see you."

SECRET SERVICE MEN SURROUND THE PRESIDENT. An hour before the arrival of the Presidential party extraordinary activity on the part of the Police and Secret Service Departments was evident. Ten local secret service men were on hand under Chief Flynn; card I had sent a year before to George Hecks and I told him I had written to accuse Miss Burger away. Q. Did you tell him you had done it in a moment of frenzy? A. I did not.

Q. When you were taken to Warren, where Brown and Spellman had been taken, did you say to Constable Wallace that if some women had suffered what you had they'd have killed Dr. Mohr long ago? A. I never said such a thing.

Q. Did you ever call Miss Burger a bleached blonde as Wallace testified? Here Mr. Rice arose saying: "Wallace never said bleached blonde; what he did testify was that Mrs. Mohr had spoken of Miss Burger as a 'peach-blonde.'"

Q. Did you see George Hecks on July 9, 1915? A. No; a few days after that. He came over to see about taking my son Charles to Newport. I said I didn't want him to go down there.

Q. Did you ever promise Brown or Spellman or Hecks money to kill the doctor? A. I certainly never did. I never offered those boys any money, never.

Q. Why did he call up? A. He wanted to take Charles to Newport and I forbade it. Q. Why did he call up? A. He wanted to take Charles to Newport and I forbade it.

Q. What happened next? A. Some time during the night while I was asleep some one knocked at my piazza door. Three of us went to the door at the same time, Miss Barker and Miss Nye, two trained nurses, and myself. When we opened the door there was a policeman there.

Q. What did you do the moment you heard the news of the shooting? A. I don't know, because I was almost frantic. Again Mrs. Mohr's tears came and for an instant she could not go on.
